KING YETA, 3RD ARRIVES IN LONDON

The guards were overpowered and killed. Then the rebels began sacking and looting the royal palace. The rebels burst into the king's room, where Lewanika and Yeta were waiting. Spears were raised for the kill but halted when the King boldly faced the intruders and saying, "follow me," to his son, walked down the lines of spears without a tremor.

Britain Offers

The British committee for Spanish relief disclosed its evacuation plan after conferences with Senor Lizaso, leader of the Basque delegation in London.

A member of the committee left for Bilbao by airplane to arrange removal of the first contingent of refugees to temporary homes in Britain, France and other countries.

During conversations between London and Paris, it was decided that the evacuation can be carried out if the Basques and Gen. Francisco Franco's insurgent government agree to the following terms:

1—Basque authorities must assure the British and French consuls at Bilbao that political reasons will not dictate the choice of the persons to be evacuated. The Bilbao government also must inform the consuls how many ships they are in a position to provide for the evacuation and when the boats will be ready.

2—The insurgent government must agree not to molest the ships departing to the refugees from Bilbao to St. Jean de Luz, France.

Diplomatic circles said there had been some misunderstanding between Roberts, Liberal M. P., and the foreign office regarding aid to be given the evacuation fleet by British warships. Roberts said the navy was preparing to aid the evacuation, but the foreign office was believed unwilling to put the fleet in motion before the desired assurances are received from the two parties in the civil war.

Sir Henry Chilton, ambassador to Spain now at Hendaye, France, has been instructed to request assurances from Salamanca that no naval or air action will be taken against Bilbao during the embarkation and transportation of the refugees.

If the reply from Salamanca is favorable, the French and British consuls at Bilbao will proceed with the evacuation. Basque circles in London said the Bilbao government intends to transport the refugees on Basque boats protected by French and British warships.

At St. Jean de Luz the refugees will be turned over to a private Anglo-French relief committee. The refugees are expected to be equally divided between France and England, with private organizations providing for their food, clothing and shelter.

FOUR PLAYS PRESENTED AT FESTIVAL

Curtain Raiser, "Nocturne," Written By Charlottetown School Teacher.

BY GUY E. RHOADES Ottawa Press Staff Writer

OTTAWA, April 29—Tonight's drama festival audience saw four plays, the longest program of the week, including an original work by Harry Foster, Charlottetown schoolmaster, the fourth of five Canadian plays to be presented at the festival.

Mr. Foster's play was performed by the Little Theatre Guild of the Prince Edward Island capital, winner at the regional festival.

In addition, the audience saw the Winnipeg Little Theatre in Philip Johnson's "The Lovely Miracle," the Vancouver Little Theatre in Nell Grant's fantasy, "The Last War," and the Brantford Drama League in a light comedy, "A Sunny Morning," by the Spaniards, Serafin and Joaquin Alvarez Quintana.

Curtain raiser was "Nocturne," in which Mr. Foster depicts reactions of six persons to a night air raid. The scene is laid outside the Church of St. Michael.

A girl (Ruth Simpson) and a priest (Ivan Y. Reddin), enter, the girl, her mind shaken by shock of a previous raid, voicing fear into the church and the priest exits into the church and she will be lost and killed if the clouds obscure the moon. Her brother is in the air force. The priest seeks to comfort her, urging her to have faith that the brother will return to her safely.

The sacristan (Mr. Foster), father of the girl, enters, tells the priest the girl is second-sighted. They talk of peace and the war, hoping it will soon be over. The priest exits into the church and she will be lost and killed if the clouds obscure the moon. Her brother is in the air force. The priest seeks to comfort her, urging her to have faith that the brother will return to her safely.

The sacristan thinks it would do no good. "They'd only come back with twice their number. We'd be worse off than before. I don't want any more of this killing, sir. I wish only to be left alone to my life here."

Marjory (Esther Rattenbury), patriot's daughter, and her husband, Philip (George Hart) enter, discussing a quarrel Philip has had with patriot. Philip, a journalist, does not wish to fight. He blames the church for having failed to prevent the war. The priest re-enters, says the church is not to blame for keeping the war going and urges them to enter the church for safety. They do.

The sacristan comes from the church, saying Philip and the patriot have started an altercation in the church. They re-enter, arguing.

Philip says he is afraid of death, "afraid of going down into the dark with all the things I had dreamed and planned blotted out forever, all my hopes thrown away for your tawdry catchwords of loyalty and patriotism."

Marjory and Philip leave for home, patriot calls after them and hurries to catch up with them. The raiders appear, guns sound, the girl cries: "Look! A flame! It is my brother."

She continues to cry out and the explosion of a bomb is heard off-stage in the direction the three others took. The priest makes the sign of the cross, saying: "If only they had stayed." The curtain falls.

Congress Approves Legislation To Keep United States Neutral

(C.P. by Guardian's Special Wire) WASHINGTON, April 29—New legislation to keep the United States neutral in war time and containing a provision that could prevent serious disruption of Canadian-American trade should Canada and Britain be engaged in a war which offered no threat to American neutrality, received quick Congressional approval today.

Leaders immediately made plans to fly the bill to the destroyer taking President Roosevelt on a Golf of Mexico fishing trip because they wanted his signature on the measure before the existing neutrality law expires Saturday night.

Chief feature of the bill, the "cash and carry" clause would give the President discretionary power during the next two years to prohibit shipment of any goods to warring nations until title to them has been transferred to the purchasers.

The Senate wanted the plan to go into operation immediately war broke out but the House wished to lodge some discretion with the President in putting the system into operation.

As worked out in conference, the measure would require the President to use the cash and carry system whenever he found that step necessary "to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States or to protect the lives of commerce of citizens." Conferees agreed to give him discretion in order that trade with Canada, for instance, might not be destroyed unnecessarily in case the Dominion were allied with Britain in a war that offered no threat to United States neutrality.

In addition the President would be allowed to make any limitation and exceptions he might see fit in respect to "lakes, rivers and inland waters bordering on the United States, and as to transportation on or over lands bordering on the United States."

National Govt. Wins One Seat, Loses Other

LONDON, April 29—The National Government held one House of Commons seat but lost another in two by-elections today.

Labor captured Wandsworth Central but the traditionally Conservative seat of West Birmingham, held by the late Sir Austen Chamberlain for more than 20 years and by his father before him, remained in the Government fold.

Major H. L. Nathan won Wandsworth Central by a majority of 485 votes. He obtained 12,406 to 11,921 for Roland Jennings, Conservative. In 1935 the late Sir Harry Jackson received 14,728 votes to 10,405 for F. W. Davis, Labor, a Conservative majority of 4,323.

Major Nathan was formerly a Liberal member of the House of Commons for Northeast Bethnal Green. His opponent is an estate agent.

Walter Higgs, a city councillor, won the West Birmingham seat by a majority considerably reduced from that given Sir Austen Chamberlain, former Foreign Secretary, in 1935.

20 HORSES TO START

Chatham Saved From Flood Disaster

(C.P. by Guardian's Special Wire) CHATHAM, Ont., April 29—Warm drying winds and bright sun today saved Chatham from flood disasters that the Thames river visited upon London and other municipalities to the east. "We were lucky," said Thomas Kingston, city manager and water-works superintendent. "If we had had another day like yesterday when it was either raining or drizzling, nothing we could have done would have saved the waterworks plant or stopped extensive damage throughout the city."

More than 2,000 sand bags were used in erecting two levees in the waterworks plant to keep the river from flooding in and causing discontinuance of all water service. The floods ate past the first barricade and into the plant itself. But auxiliary pumps were used all night and today to keep the water from the electric motors. Not more than 10 houses in the city were damaged seriously by the flood, although hundreds of homes and business establishments reported flooded cellars. Along only two or three avenues did the flood sweep into the living quarters of houses. About 50 persons evacuated their homes when the waters reached their doorsteps.
