DESCRIPTION OF ISLANDER ON PACIFIC

"I want you," he said, "to bring that man around who said I was slovenly and dirty and dressed in a coat with the grease of years on its collar. I want to see the man who said I lived in a hovel at 391 Union Avenue, and I want him to apologize for what he said. He came to my house last night at 12 o'clock with a telegram from Montreal telling about Sir William having decided to come here to see me, and then he said that about my house and my coat."

The old man drew his faded raincoat around him a little closer perhaps to hide those places where buttons had ceased to do their natural service, or perhaps to ward off the cold, and extended his eyes-glasses as if wont with ornaments.

FEELS FOR HIS TENANTS.

"I don't care for myself," he said, earnestly, "and I want you to make this plain, but I am thinking of my tenants. My house is a nice seven-roomed place worth $5,000 and I don't like to have it called a hovel, because it will make my tenants feel bad."

"Perhaps I am slovenly, I will admit the coin," and the old man looked slowly up and down the battered garments he wore. "But then," he continued, "I am not like you starved and scrubbed fellows; I am a bill collector and have to work for my living."

The conversation was fast becoming personal and it was time to change. "I understand, Mr. McDonald," it was hinted, "that you are a man of wealth, that in your life in Portland you have accumulated quite a sum of money. Why then do you follow your line of business and why do you allow anyone, an opportunity to cast slurs at your clothes and their cleanliness?"

Out from behind the screen of his brows an angry gleam shot from the old man's eyes.

SAYS HE IS WORTH A FORTUNE.

"I am worth $300,000 in money and $50,000 in judgments, but it is all in other people's pockets," he said. "The bankrupt law is a robbery and has cheated me out of $200,000. The flat salary for sheriffs and justices is a fraud and a cheat. When they would get fees for what they did, they would take a case, but now they say the claim is not valid. They don't want to do any more than they have to do, and I am going to put a petition before the legislature to create a special Justice of the Peace for my business. Then perhaps, we can get satisfaction."

"What is there about the $1,000,000 claim which you have against the state government? How did you happen to have such a claim as that?" Mr. McDonald was asked.

The old man smiled a pleasant smile of reminiscence for he was about to talk of his hobby.

"That claim is one I have against the state government for the services of myself and others in the Indian wars of '35 and '36. After the war I bought the claims of many of the veterans, paying them 50 cents on the dollar for them until I had bought assignments amounting to a large sum. This sum has been bearing compound interest for 40 years, which makes the total about $1,000,000."

It was not perfectly clear how the government happened to be mixed up in the debt, so Mr. McDonald told a little history. In '35 and '36 he said, he had enlisted to serve against the Indians, and at that time he and his comrades were promised $2 a day for their services and $2 a day for the horses which they furnished. It was the understanding that the government would pay the bills, but in the event of refusal, the Territory of Oregon, would assume the obligation. The government paid a small part of the claims, but scaled them down to 50 cents a day, and under the agreement the claim passed from the territory to the state when Oregon was admitted in 1859. That was the ground work for his contention, and now he is about to see to it that the legislature does something for the widows and orphans, and incidentally for their assignees.

"Senator Nottingham is pledged to do what he can for the Indian War Veterans," continued the speaker. "Before the election I met him on the street, and I asked him if he would introduce a bill appropriating money to pay their claims, and he gave me his pledge to do it. Then the champion of the orphans beaned benignly, 'then I said, 'Nottingham, I will vote for you even if you are a Republican,' and I went out and got seventy-five votes for Nottingham," concluded the petitioner.

"Did Mr. Nottingham present the petition?" the narrator was asked.

THREATENS TO BRING SUIT.

"I think he is going to," was the answer. "I went up to his office and found the petition gave him, signed by more than 2,000 of the citizens of Portland, and I asked him why it was laying on his desk. He said he thought there had been a law passed refusing to pay any assigned claims; and I told him if he presented the petition I would wait for the state to take action, but if the Legislature did not pay I would bring suit against it and the government in the Federal courts and force them to do it. I have written to many orphans and widows of Indian war veterans, and now have $15,000 offered me to carry on the suit before the Court of Claims."

James McDonald is a character of Portland, a man with a history. He came here in 1850, and took up a section of land. Drying the winter he worked for a mercantile house, and with his earnings and $1000 which he had brought across the plains with him, sent to San Francisco for farming implements and seed. The firm became bankrupt and he lost his investment.

The man then worked during the summer of '58 for a farmer, and with his earnings bought a single mule, and packed between Xenovia and Scottsburg. As fast as he would earn the price he added another mule to his pack train until he had 30 working over the roads. When the Indian war broke out he went into the service with his entire train.

Twenty years ago he came to Portland, and since that time has been a continual resident of the city. He has invested in many places and planned many investments, all of which seem to have been unsuccessful, until the pioneer has become a pessimist. He as he grew older, became a bill collector and has forgotten his relatives in Canada, living a lonely life in the midst of the thousands; and it was not until his desire to present the claim he holds against the state and government induced him to seek a loan of his long forgotten brother in Montreal that he brought himself to the notice of his family.

LEFT HOME AT AGE OF THIRTY

Fifty years ago when he left Tracadie, Prince Edward Island he was 30 years of age, and was one of a large family. For 30 years he kept up a desultory correspondence, but for the past twenty years has dropped from the sight of his family. In this time William McDonald's alleged younger brother has accumulated a fortune in the tobacco business, and is now supposed to be on the way west to meet his brother, whom he thought to be dead. The meeting will be a strange one, on the one hand the man of wealth and refinement, on the other the aged collector of bad debts into whose life has come the bitterness of unsuccess and the sorrows of many defeats; on the one side the optimism of money, on the other the cynicism of its lack. The manufacturer comes to seek the long-lost brother for love of the brother, the collector wants to get him not that he is a brother, but because perhaps he will have the means to force the wheels of the law into action to bring untold wealth into the lap of an often and ever unfortunate man.

NOTHING WORSE IN THIS LIFE

Than Headaches—They are Caused by Bad Stomachs and Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets will Cure Them.

Probably nothing in life is more distressing than a headache. You can't work, you can't rest, you can only fret and suffer. But did it ever occur to you who suffer from headaches that you have yourself, and no one else to blame? Nine-tenths of all headaches are caused by the stomach not working right. And if you give your stomach a chance it will work right. Think of the quiet ripples you have eaten, of the rich foods you have partaken of, and then confess that you have often overworked your stomach without ever thinking to give it any assistance.

Give it the help it needs. Give it Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets. They always cure all stomach ills. Mr. Joseph Leake, 194 McCaul St., Toronto, says:

"My daughter was troubled with Headaches and Dyspepsia and Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets cured her. I also was troubled with Dyspepsia and Biliousness and one box of Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets cured me."
