WE'RE HAT-TERS.

Yes sir Hatters with twenty-three years of experience and you'll find that we will give you the very latest tips on Hats. Every "Christy" Hat we will show you may be worn by you suppose you travel to any large city in America or Europe and the style will not cause you one shade of annoyance, as you'll be wearing just the right Hat.

In American Hats

It's very hard and takes lots of experience to watch the styles, and choose the Hats which will be worn most. Many American Hats are sold in this town as being right up-to-date and if you wore one of them across the border you'd find that you would not see another like it in a year's travel.

You'd then have to throw your Hat away and buy a new one, and the clerk would likely tell you that your Hat was in style last year or the year before. It's not a nice experience is it.

THAT CAN NEVER HAPPEN HERE

We have a man on the American side who sends us the Hat news the moment anything new comes out, sends us all information concerning it and puts us in a position to show them to you at the same time there shown there.

A POINTER

Watch the travellers. If they are wearing the Hat you are, then your hat is right, if not, then your hat is wrong because they are in a position to know.

A Hat which is in style is always found here; if it's not here its not in style. Don't forget it please.

The Stylish Hatters.

A SEA MYSTERY.

When Pompeii was unearthed after many centuries of sleep beneath volcanic ashes the remains of a Roman sentinel were found at his post, and the figure thus made conspicuous has since served as a model of fidelity to duty. It would not be hard to find many such among the common working people of today. The captain, who is the last to leave his sinking ship, who perhaps loses his life after providing safety for passengers and crew; the engineer on a locomotive who saves the lives of his passengers and dies at his post rather than leap to safety and leave them to perish; many instances of attempted rescue on sea and land, in the lifeboat service, at fires, in mines and scores of other ways in which men give their lives for others, are not less admirable and worthy of the plaudits of successive generations than was the famous but anonymous Roman sentinel of Pompeii.

The history of the British navy affords many instances of this self-sacrificing heroism and adherence to discipline. Only the other day when the submarine torpedo craft A 1 was brought to the surrface off Southampton, where she had been run down and sunk by a passing steamer, every officer and man was found at his post of duty. The commander was in the conning tower, the lieutenant stood just below him in a convenient position for transmitting orders, the coxswain was at the steering gear and all the other members of the crew were at their proper stations. It appears that an exceedingly small leak had resulted from the collision. It was not enough to cause immediate trouble and no steps had apparently been taken to stop it. Perhaps the officer in charge did not think it needed prompt attention and ignored it. Or he may have been stunned by the collision and unable to give the necessary directions. Possibly too the lieutenant may have been prevented from acting by the same cause at the same instant. In any case we have a beautiful exhibition of discipline, worthy of record.

All else must ever remain a mystery of the sea. There is no explanation possible except the testimony of the boat itself and of these dead men now forever silent. We know that at some time before the end all of them who were conscious became aware that they must die. Yet there were no evidences of panic or excitement. With such fore knowledge of imminent death every man was free to act for himself. They each for himself chose to die at his post. It is believed that the outlook man on the submarine discovered the approaching steamer only when it was too late to avoid a collision. The commander took the one course open to him of causing the submarine to dive deeper with the hope of passing safely beneath the steamer. The keel of the latter struck the submarine on the conning tower. This gives rise to the impression that the commander, who was found in the tower, may have been stunned by the impact. All else is mystery. One fact stands out in grand relief. The officers and men, worthy of equal honor, each died at his post of duty.

A large circle of friends will learn wit sorrow and regret of the death of Miss Sarah Irving, eldest daughter of D. P. Irving, Esq., M.L.A., of Vernon River Bridge. The deceased young lady, who was for some time nurse in the P. E. Island Hospital had been for about two years past attending to her professional duties in the Lady Stanley Hospital at Ottawa. There her death took place yesterday after a brief illness from typhoid fever. Miss Irving left a luxurious home to devote her life to the care of the sick and suffering. She has fallen at her post in a noble life work. The Guardian extends sincere sympathy to the parents, brothers and sisters of the deceased.

Hitherto neither St. John nor Vancouver, respectively the Atlantic and Pacific termini of the one Canadian transcontinental railway, have had any military defences worthy of the name. Both cities and ports were at the mercy of any marauding cruiser from a hostile fleet should war have broken out. The Government are now acting upon the principle of practical common sense in providing some means of defence. Partridge Island, which commands the entrance to St. John harbor is to be strongly fortified, the works to be commenced in the near future and the guns of heavy calibre will be ready this fall. Vancouver will also be protected against emergencies. We hope yet to see Charlottetown better protected than it is against a possible attack from sea. The time of perpetual peace has not yet come, although long hoped for.

THE JOY OF LIVING.

It is only the healthy who find a real joy in life. Weak, nervous, languid and discouraged people find new hope and energy in the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. With new rich blood coursing through the veins and the thrill of new nerve force sent tingling along the nerve fibres, the joy of living returns and diseass and weakness disappear.
