

Here are the Facts

You hear about the "active principle" of cod liver oil and are told that in certain wines, cordials and extracts of cod liver oil this principle is presented with the objectionable features left out. Nothing to it. The only active principle of cod liver oil is the whole oil!

For years it has been known that in cod liver oil are united, in almost invisible form, valuable medicinal agents that maintain their value only so long as they are kept in perfect combination, in the whole oil. There is no process of medical skill or chemical science that can unite these peculiar properties as they exist in the whole oil; that is why there can be no substitute for cod liver oil.

In Scott's Emulsion the whole oil is presented perfectly emulsified so that it will readily enter the system without effort or tax on the digestive tract. The hypophosphites of lime and soda which are combined with it are valuable tonics, increasing the appetite, strengthening the nerves and restoring vitality in the whole system.

The most effective way of taking cod liver oil, as well as the easiest and safest, is in the form of Scott's Emulsion. Avoid these so-called wines, cordials and extracts of cod liver oil that are prepared for the taste only, contain none of the value of cod liver oil which are dosed with a large percentage of alcohol. Scott's Emulsion has been the reliable cod liver oil preparation for over a quarter of a century.

MORPIS & SMITH,

JAS. L. FORD ADVOCATES NEW STUDY

Chair Needed for Courtship and Matrimony

IN COLLEGES FOR WOMEN

He Says That in Wide Range of Education the Most Essential Has Been Neglected.

Mr. James L. Ford, in the course of an article in "Munsey's Magazine," sets out to show that in the highest institutions of female learning there is one study too few instead of ten too many; and the thing that is needed is a chair of courtship and matrimony.

To study the curriculum of a women's college is to become deeply impressed with the fact that no matter how wide or deep may be the range of learning placed at the disposal of the students, the most essential study of womanhood is strangely neglected. There is not a single women's college in the land which has a chair of courtship and matrimony. When I become rich it is my intention to establish and endow one at some leading seat of feminine education. My chair of courtship and matrimony is not designed to teach girls how to attract the male of their species—most of them are born with a fuller comprehension of that engrossing art than I could give them—but rather to aid them in the far less understood and vastly more important matter of selection. I would also suggest a post-graduate course of lectures in regard to the best scheme for retaining a husband after he has been chosen.

"I shall stipulate in my deed of endowment that the incumbent of this chair of courtship and matrimony shall be a woman of mature years, high native intelligence and great social experience. I should prefer one who had been courted and married, and shall endeavor to secure one who has also undergone the experience of divorce. It shall be her duty to lecture three times a week on the perils of modern society, and to illustrate her discourse, whenever possible, by placing on the platform specimens of the different types of men that a young girl may expect to encounter when she leaves college and begins to take up the serious duties of life.

"The first thing that I would desire the incumbent of my chair of courtship and matrimony to impress upon her undergraduate hearers is the fact that to make a really good match in this country it is necessary to wed either a pauper or a multi-millionaire. The man who possesses a small income and has not sufficient energy to work as if he had none, at all, is to be avoided like the plague, as he will make a most unsatisfactory husband.

"It will be impossible, of course, for the chair of matrimony to discuss within the brief limits of a college course all the kinds of men that should be avoided, but I can at least sound a warning note in regard to some of those with whom the young girl graduate is likely to be brought in contact under present social conditions. In the choosing of a multi-millionaire she should seek advice, not from my chair, but from someone who is quick at figures, as it is a mere matter of dollars; but in regard to the others, she should be carefully instructed during her college course.

"There is no variety of the male of our species better deserving of conscientious consideration at the hands of this instructor than that which the impulsive and inexperienced woman delights to brand as 'interesting.' I positively shudder when I hear a young girl express a preference for a man because he is so 'interesting,' and I know that she is on the wrong road to happiness when she rejects the attentions of anyone on the ground that, although he may be honest and truthful and sincere, he is 'not interesting.'

"The interesting actor is a particularly dangerous type of fakir, because he not only carries with him the glamor of his profession, but also has so many unoccupied evenings on his hands—thanks to a popular taste that does not always go astray—that he has better opportunities than his fellow-players, who are busy on the stage, to make the acquaintance of impressionable young women, and to convince them by his persistent talk about himself and his 'art' that he is as interesting as they would like to believe him. Another type who will serve to illustrate a discourse is the Interesting Artist who has never learned how to draw. He possesses, however, a fine vocabulary of the claptrap of the profession, and always sneers at anything that is popular. A favorite pose of his is that of the neglected genius who is starving in a garret because his work is too good for the world to appreciate. The Interesting Literary Man occurs in endless variety, in the pathway of the young graduate, and requires a special course of lectures to himself. To begin with, there is the Interesting Playwright, who has been writing dramas for several years, and who hopes that an artistic revolution will one day place in control of a metropolitan theater some manager with a soul above the box-office and a brain capable of appreciating really good work. The Interesting Poet is also well worthy of the attention of the incumbent of my chair of courtship and matrimony. He is at least true to one ancient poetic tradition in that he wears long hair, and has always in stock a smile of singularly sweet and sympathetic sadness, which he produces on special occasions as children produce their company manners. After having listened to the full course of lectures on the men who are to shun, each graduating class should have an opportunity to meet some really interesting and accomplished men who can tell them something about poetry, art and letters."
