All New York society is talking of the beautiful young woman who has been seen at every first night performance recently. She is said to be the image of Mary O'Grady, a Countess Zattiany, but all attempts to establish her identity prove futile.

To Clavering she tells the whole story of her unhappy marriage, her subsequent love affairs abroad, her husband's death, of her work and its toll of her health, and finally of the operation in Vienna which had brought back her youth.

Her popularity among the men, however, arouses the resentment of the younger women, those of her own apparent age, and they take the occasion of one of her dinner parties to manifest their hostility.

Gora was looking her best in a smart spring frock of brown tweed with a drooping red feather on her hat, whose pointed brim almost but not quite obscured one eye.

For 12 years Mrs. Cook had gas on the stomach and was nervous and short of breath. Finally she took simple glycerine, buckthorn bark, etc., as mixed in Adierka, and it did her a world of good.

"Oh, not at all!" Miss Dwight rushed to the defence of native American genius. But all writers, no matter what their gifts, often go through a period of torture while forming habits of regular work.

"But I detest writing," said Madame Zattiany. "I like the activity of doing."

phatically. "I am sure you could learn to play a humble part in the reconstruction of Europe," murmured Madame Zattiany; and one of her beautiful white hands moved towards the cigarette box with a curious tensing of the muscles that seemed to rob it subtly of its likeness to flesh.

"But I detest writing," said Madame Zattiany, who was lying back and watching her smoke rings. "I like the activity of doing, and particularly fit me for political intrigue. If this were Washington, now."

"Washington! Washington! is merely one of the islands outside of New York. So is Chicago, Boston, the rest of them. . . . and don't imagine you would not become fascinated with writing as soon as you were in your satire. Here is a simple recipe to begin with. Get up every morning with the set intention of writing and go to your desk and sit there for three hours, whether you accomplish anything or not. Before long you will find that you are writing madly, not waiting for inspiration. And you will have Clavey to criticize you. The rest is only stern self-discipline. Here is another suggestion: when you have brain fog go to bed for two days and starve. The result is miraculous.

"So that is the way American writers are made. There are so many of them—I had often wondered."

Gora laughed. But she also could turn into a soothsayer. "I think it a splendid arrangement. Then we should not lose Lee altogether, for we really are devoted to him. He is an adorable creature for all his absurdities. But I can't endure the thought of losing you."

DRECO DID THE WORK

After Everything Else Failed, Mrs. McLean Tried Dreco With Immediate Result in Improved Health

What Dreco accomplished for Mrs. McLean, of 25 Richmond Street, Charlottetown, it will do for any one who gives it a fair trial. It is the most reliable tonic and system-builder known which facts were speedily demonstrated to this Charlottetown lady as shown in the following statement.

"For a number of years says Mrs. McLean, 'I suffered from stomach trouble, indigestion and constipation. Nothing gave me any relief until I tried Dreco. 'Everything I ate formed gas and caused me great pain. I could hardly eat anything as a result of this after-suffering. Constipation was also a source of great annoyance. I was giving up all hopes of ever getting well when I heard about Dreco and decided to give it a trial. The first bottle gave me wonderful relief and ended my constipation. I am now on my third bottle and am feeling fine. Have no more gas or pains and as I said before, am no longer troubled with constipation.'"

Dreco is being specially introduced in Charlottetown by E. A. Foster. It is also sold in other cities as follows: Montague, H. J. Mabon; Souris, Souris Drug Co.; Summerside, Gallant Drug Co., Ltd., and by a good druggist everywhere.

The Middle Ground

By Marion Rubincam. A SENSE OF JUSTICE Chapter 72

But Mrs. Talbot knew that she could not keep this up forever. One evening when she sensed that Amy was likely to become engaged to Adam she could bring Dick in as a third party—but that was all. There were many times when Adam and Amy saw each other alone, many times when he could ask her to marry him.

"Why does Dick come around? I don't want to see him!" Amy stormed, the day after his "causal visit."

"Why do you come around? I told you not to," she said to Dick, when he came in the following evening, and she was alone.

"I came around because I can't keep away," he replied humbly. "I told you not to come and see me."

"I know. So I had a fine idea. I decided to come and see your mother. You can't prevent your mother from receiving callers."

"Then, I'll send her into the living room, and I'll retire into my bedroom," Amy said, getting up with great dignity.

"If you try to pass—I'll—I'll kiss you," he announced.

"You're not like a sentimental school boy," Amy retorted in disgust, going towards the couch.

"Why? Arnold kissed you?" "He didn't."

"He did. I could see it in your face."

"Then he laughed, as Amy's hand went to her mouth, unconscious confession of what had happened. 'Perhaps I'm going to marry him,' she taunted.

"You're not, you're going to marry me!"

The words were childish, perhaps, but the voice was not. Dick came towards her again, and Amy drew back, half afraid, and half willing to be caught.

"Don't—don't touch me—and I'll let you come and see me," she said. And Dick was satisfied with this half-triumph.

Suddenly Amy saw that Dick, simple and youthful as he seemed, was capable of being jealous even of a boy. So she played the two against each other one evening.

As to whether Adam asked her to marry him next day she would not say. But he assumed an air of possession that drove Mrs. Talbot half crazy. He had a way of taking Amy's hand, of asking her for a match for his cigarette, of telling her to get up a party to drive in the evening, of sending for her to help him choose wall papers for his country house—that pointed toward some understanding.

But whether or not Amy was afraid to confess to an engagement or whether she was hesitating, now that he had asked her, her mother could not find out. Amy was capable of being a sphinx when she wanted.

So though Jane, as a problem, was eliminated, the affairs of Luther and Claire seemed only to grow more complicated. And Luther in particular made her unhappy. He was the nervous type that suffers physically from mental depression, and he was mentally depressed all that winter. It showed in his hollow cheeks and the wistful expression of his great eyes.

One evening she said, suddenly: "If Claire wants a divorce, Luther, you'd better let her get it." Luther started at her in amazement.

"I don't believe in divorce, and I never will. But Claire is not the sort of girl for you to be married to. She's bound to go her own way, spending money, wearing fine dresses, wasting her time on pleasures. You should have married a quiet, domestic, sensible girl, who would have made you happy. Better let Claire go entirely—and forget her."

"And take advantage of my freedom to marry a quiet, sensible girl?" Luther asked.

$2,500 Damages for Shop Assistant

LONDON, Jan. 7.—A shop assistant whose rooms were alleged to have been ransacked on suspicion that she had stolen a quantity of silk was awarded $2,500 damages in the King's Bench Division recently.

Mrs. Abbott while employed as an assistant in a silk department, she was called into the office and interrogated by two police officers, concerning the loss from the department of two rolls of silk.

She answered the questions and gave all the information she had. Then, she alleged, she was told by one of the officers that if she did not believe her, and that if she did not tell the truth things might be unpleasant for her.

She said she was "made flat" to accompany the police to her flat, which was ransacked from end to end. Even the mattress of her bed was examined.

Eventually her employers told that they were quite satisfied about her innocence, but no apology was offered for the way she had been treated.

Her employers reply was that they informed the police of the loss of the silk, and were not responsible for the manner in which the police carried out their duties. A buyer for the firm said he was shown some silk produced by Mrs. Abbott, as her property which she had bought and paid for.

The Lord Chief Justice: You and the two policemen seem to have extended to this lady as much courtesy as to a candidate at a Parliamentary election.

Summing up, the Lord Chief Justice said, that if Mrs. Abbott were right in her statement of what happened, she had been treated with a cynical disregard of what was due to her; her dignity had been affronted and her rights invaded.

There were cases—and this case was one of them—where the jury might think it right to mark their sense of what was done, by giving what was called exemplary damages, so as to make it plain that the conduct complained of, was such that a British jury would not tolerate.

The jury agreed and they gave her $2,500 damages.
