Body In Hero's Grave Not That Of Famed Flier

(By Ralph Heinzen, United Press Staff Correspondent)

PARIS, June 18.—(U.P.)—Fifteen years after he fell to his death inside the German lines after a stubborn air battle above Verdun, the body of the famed Lafayette Escadrille pilot to die in combat, is convinced that the body buried under his name in the American army cemetery at Suresnes is not his.

After hostilities ended, friends hunted out the grave of Chapman and found a cross, well inside the old German lines, which bore on one side the name of Victor Chapman and on the other the name of a German soldier.

The tomb was excavated and two bodies were found, one with bits of a German uniform and one with French equipment. The remains of the French soldier were carried back to Paris and buried in the Suresnes cemetery, but recently the body was exhumed to permit a comparison of teeth and other identifications.

Difference in Teeth

Chapman's former French mechanic, other Americans in the Foreign Legion and members of the family have found great differences in the teeth and shape of the body, which now leads them to believe that for 12 years they have been worshipping another in the grave of Chapman and that he will lie forever in an unmarked grave.

Chapman, a great-grandson of a signer of the Declaration of Independence, John Jay, and a son of John Jay Chapman, essayist and poet, of Barrytown and New York, was last seen in action when he accompanied Raoul Lufbery and Norman Prince over the German lines near Verdun. French airmen saw Chapman's plane dive straight down and break into pieces well inside the enemy lines. The American had been fighting five Germans. That occurred July 23, 1916.

May Have Fainted

Chapman had been warned against flying that day, for his head was still bandaged from a bad scalp wound and his arm still bothered him from a bullet received in combat a month before. It was never decided whether he fainted from weakness or was shot in the air.

Chapman had volunteered, enlisted in the Foreign Legion in September, 1914, and was one of the four founders of the Lafayette Escadrille. Before the war he had attended Harvard and then came to Paris to study architecture at the Beaux Arts. War broke out while he was touring England with his parents.

Chapman's father has reached no decision about carving out the inscription on the tomb at Suresnes, but it is understood to have accepted the decision of Chapman's war comrades, now in Paris, who have concluded that the body is not that of the airman.

Jericho before the Jewish hosts under Joshua was apparently due to an earthquake. He based his theory upon the discovery that the walls of the city had fallen outward in places in a manner which suggested seismic disturbances.

The same natural phenomenon accounts for the drying up of the Jordan for the Jews to cross, he believes. The expedition, he says, has gathered evidence that the clay banks of the river caved in near El Damieth at about the period described in the Bible.

Sir Charles Marston, who has financed three expeditions to confirm the authenticity of Bible records, believes this naturalistic explanation of the miracles really corroborates the biblical description.

King Alfonso Has Constant Reminders at Fontainebleau

BY RICHARD D. McMILLAN (United Press Staff Correspondent)

FONTAINEBLEAU, June 18.—The once proud rulers of the Spanish people, Alfonso XIII and his Queen have become a humble couple in exile.

In their daily walks in this historical town, where they have chosen to reflect at leisure of the evanescent glory of monarchs, for almost every turn they are reminded of the ill-fated careers of other rulers whose rise and fall are part of history.

The ex-King Alfonso finds a melancholy pleasure in browsing amidst the shadows within the grimy walls of the Chateau of Fontainebleau and often he has peeped into the room where, in 1814, the great Napoleon himself was humbled when he signed his decree of abdication. He visits also the apartments where Pope Pius VII was held prisoner by Bonaparte.

Mind at Rest

Friends close to the king declare his mind is now at rest so far as Spain is concerned. He does not believe that he will ever return to his country as its ruler and he has frankly told his family so.

The queen, on the other hand, is optimistic and she repeatedly tells her ladies-in-waiting: "You will see, the day will come when the Spanish people will ask us to come back again. The monarchy has fallen before, but the people have repented afterwards and brought their rulers back from their exile."

King Alfonso's two main cares at the present time, it is authoritatively declared are, firstly, financial and secondly, the future of his third and favorite son, Don Juan Carlos, now a naval cadet in the British naval college at Dartmouth.

It is to see this boy that the king makes occasional trips to London and he often talks with him on the long-distance phone. Alfonso was overjoyed when he induced the British Admiralty to accept Juan's earlier studies in the Spanish naval academy as valid in England, thus ensuring that the youth will pass out from the college in a year or two as a full-fledged lieutenant in the British Navy.

Busy Exile

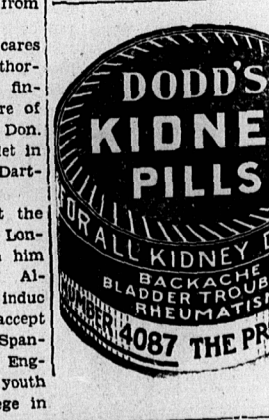

While the former queen passes most of her time visiting Paris to shop and while the royal children amuse themselves playing golf, ex-King Alfonso conducts a great deal of business from his office which has been set up in the hotel in which he is passing his exile.

The deposed monarch has had many business affairs to liquidate. There have been many rumors about the extent of his private fortune—some estimates have placed these have been greatly exaggerated. From the standpoint of the standard of living to which he has been accustomed he is a poor man. Only by careful economies can he balance his personal budget. Each week he has a heavy expense account to meet, including a big hotel bill for the family and their entourage and servants.

"The royal family have their jewels, certainly," an individual close to the royal exiles said, "but they would never consent to sell them. The pride of the royal house of Spain would prevent that."

Realizing that the ex-king, if not broke, is feeling the financial pinch, the royal servants are reported to have volunteered to accept smaller wages, but Alfonso refused.

As is well known, Alfonso is a keen huntsman and often goes with friends, including the Duke de Alba, boar hunting in the forest, which is noted for this sport. In the forest of Fontainebleau, the President of the French Republic often gives boar-hunting expeditions, a custom which has been observed in French political life for centuries.

GLEANINGS FROM TRYON AND VICINITY

On Tuesday evening, June 9th, a shower was held at the home of Mr and Mrs. Charles Lord in honor of the approaching marriage of Miss Beatrice Cobb of Mount Tryon. Little Miss Jessie Lord and Master Leash Waddell carried in a gaily trimmed clothes basket filled to overflowing with gifts, which they placed at the bride-to-be's feet.

Misses Jennie Waddell and Rita Muttart opened the gifts and Miss Leah Lord read the contributions from the local poets. Miss Cobb although completely taken by surprise thanked her friends in a few well chosen words for their kindness and thoughtfulness. The remainder of the evening was pleasantly spent in games and music. A dainty lunch was served by the ladies.

Mrs. Arthur Halliwell of Tryon has returned after spending a pleasant fortnight in Charlottetown the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Claude Vessey.

The sympathy of the entire community is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth MacDonald of Tryon on the death of their infant son, William Kenneth, aged 8 days. Interment was made in the people's cemetery at Tryon.

HONORING FRANKLIN K. LANE A three million dollar schoolhouse in greater New York, one erected to house five thousand students, has been officially designated as the Franklin K. Lane school.

"Californians," says the Bakersfield Californian, "or some of the cities therein, might take a lesson from the fact."

New York names a school after Lane because he was a great American. In this State he was known as that, and as a first citizen of the commonwealth, a self-made man who reached high place in the state of his adoption and the Government of the nation. As the Bakersfield editor reminds us: "Once he came within a few hundred votes of being elected Governor of this State despite the overwhelming majority against his party, and as Secretary of the Interior under President Wilson he made an enviable record, reflecting the highest credit upon the national administration and upon the state which he represented."

"He was a sound thinker, a forceful orator and a man with highest courage. While our school authorities in California are seeking names for schools hereafter, it would be a recognition of the services of a distinguished citizen if the name of Franklin K. Lane should be chosen."

Franklin K. Lane, as most Canadians know, was a distinguished son of Prince Edward Island.

IN MEMORIAM

MR. GEORGE M. WRIGHT

The community and Searletown Church has suffered an irreparable loss in the death of George M. Wright, of Central Bedque, who changed earth for immortality on June 10th. The call came suddenly as Mr. Wright was engaged at some task about the mill of which he had been the owner for several years. He was only sixty-five years of age and gave promise of many years more of usefulness. But the end came as he would have desired. There was no wasting infirmities of old age, no lingering illness; just the one sweet call, the sudden laying down of the burden and the chariot of God.

Mr. Wright had a host of friends. The day the news of his sudden death was flashed about the countryside strong men wept. At his funeral the Searletown church was literally packed and quite as many outside who were unable to obtain admittance. All classes and creeds spoke of him as an ideal Christian. He was a quiet man and of a strong personality, sympathetic, and a friend to all. A Methodist before Union and a member of the United Church since, he never wavered in his loyalty to his Lord. He had been Superintendent of the Searletown Sunday School for several years and teacher of a class of boys, Church Steward, and always a liberal supporter of his church.

The deceased leaves to mourn his loss a widow, formerly Miss Mary Trueman, of Searletown, two daughters, Mrs. Elliot Wright of Middleton, and Mrs. George Runcy, of Searletown; also three sons, Rev. R. C. of Japan; Walter, who resides on the Trueman homestead at Searletown, and Lewis, who lives at home. Charles Wright of Cape Traverse is a brother and Mrs. Prince Leard of Bedque is a sister.

Services were held at the house, the Searletown Church and the grave by the pastor, Rev. A. J. Reynolds, assisted by Rev. G. N. Somers and Rev. Mr. Crowe.

CHINA LETTER BY D. C. BESS United Press Staff Correspondent

PEIPING, June 18. (U.P.)—The possibility that the League of Nations shall play a more important part in China than in any other country of the world is considered very seriously here following the visits of a number of the highest officials of the League.

All of these visitors have included Peiping in their Chinese tour, and have declared that Chinese government officials are earnest in their desire to obtain the technical advice and moral support of the League in the task of reconstructing China.

They point out that the vast machinery organized at Geneva during the past 12 years is admirably suited to function in China, and that Chinese leaders apparently realize this fact more completely than any other country has done.

Since December the directors of three technical organizations of the League have visited China. They are Dr. L. Rachman, director of the Health Section; Robert Haas, director of the Transit Section, and Sir Arthur Salter, director of the Economic and Financial Section. All have been impressed by the possibilities for cooperation between the League and the Chinese government.

WOMAN'S RHYMES ENLIVEN HOUSE

BY HARVEY JOHN HICKEY Mail and Empire Staff Writer Ottawa, June 18.—It took Miss Agnes Macphail, Canada's only woman M. P., to choose poetry tonight as a means of brightening the dull record of the budget debate in the House of Commons.

Miss Macphail was talking about the Bennett budget's increase in the duty on oranges. A mere man would have said that it was outrageous or that it was a tremendous stride towards the upbuilding of Empire, according to his political views. Miss Macphail quoted a piece of poetry about a vitamin-starved baby. It ran: "The baby daily pines away, 'He got no vitamin called a, 'His hair fell out, his tooth was loose."

"He could not have his orange juice."

The House roared with laughter as Miss Macphail buttressed her argument with this doggerel. In fact, her whole speech, brought as much laughter from the Government benches as from the Opposition. When she concluded, Sam Jacobs, K. C., Liberal M. P. for Cartier-Montreal, and regarded as the wit of the House, rose to ask her a question.

Doesn't the honorable member agree," he asked, referring to one of the several industries which Premier Bennett claimed, had been brought to Canada by his tariff policy, "that the Government is at least entitled to credit for bringing us that extra hair-pin factory?" "I can't think what I'd do without it," replied Miss Macphail, amid another wave of laughter.

BIBLE MIRACLE EVIDENCE FOUND

LONDON, June 18.—(U.P.)—Material evidence of two of the most spectacular miracles of the Bible has been gathered by British archaeologists, according to messages from Palestine.

Professor John Garstang, leader of the Jericho expedition financed by Sir Charles Marston, has reported that the collapse of the walls of Health Plans

The health plans about which the League has already been consulted include a system of quarantine, a new Central Field Health station in Nanking, medical education and the training of Chinese health officers, and cholera control.

The League's Transit Section has been asked to assist in plans for Hwai river improvement, in the work of the North China River commission, harbor development in Shanghai, and creation of a central civil engineering field station at Nanking designed to train Chinese civil engineers and direct highway and river improvements.

A boy was about to purchase a ticket to a movie when the ticket seller said to him: Why aren't you at school? Oh, it's all right, sir, he replied, I've got the measles.
