Katharine Hepburn And Cary Grant At Prince Edward

A new Hepburn, glowingly human, gloriously modern, may be found at the Prince Edward Theatre, where "Holiday" opened yesterday. With Cary Grant again cast as her co-star, Katharine Hepburn offers a sparkling performance, and one of the finest characterizations of the season. The story of the Fifth Avenue "black sheep" who tries to conceal her affection for her sister's finance, and of the promising young business man who wants to take a "Holiday" in order to learn the real meaning of life but certain that it doesn't lie in money-grubbing is brought to glorious screen fulfillment by Columbia and Cukor.

As the heroine, Miss Hepburn loses herself in an understanding humor that will widen her field of admirers. Cary Grant, as her rival, has a role with more serious motivation than in any of his previous pictures, but a role which bubbles over with the good spirits he is so apt at reflecting.

Lew Ayres creates a new and attractive figure of himself as the insolent brother, while Doris Nolan brings loveliness and a carefully toned touch of coolness to the role of the sister, Edward Everett Horton shows himself at his best as the very human Professor Potter, with Jean Dixon appearing as Funch, and Jack O'Shea something to remember. Binnie Barnes, Henry Daniell, and George Pauncefort are others of the talented and well chosen cast.

At no time in her career has Hepburn appeared so brilliantly as she does in "Holiday."

"Coconut Grove" At The Capitol

A crew of swing nutty and fame hungry musicians "jammed" their way across the continent last night in the new film that opened at the Capitol Theatre, right into an audition at the Coconut Grove.

Rotary

"If good will and service are needed in any field of experience today, it is certainly needed in our international relations," said Rotarian R. H. Rogers, in speaking at the Rotary luncheon yesterday afternoon on the subject of "Rotary Information," the speaker being chairman of that committee.

Rotarian Rogers further stated that hatred and distress have divided the nations in the world, and sounding with preparations for conflict. The outlook is disheartening in the extreme but there are some encouraging signs, some influences at work which give us hope. One of these is the success of the Junior Red Cross movement, whereby more than sixteen million boys and girls in fifty countries are banded together to promote health, good citizenship and international peace.

Another is Rotary still growing and extending, still disseminating the gospel of service and brotherhood. It is an inspiration to be identified with this great crusade. Rotarian A. R. Belcher was in the chair.

The speaker, at the outset, stated that the information would be chiefly for the use of new members. He then discussed the history, the objects, the scope and activities of Rotary. He defined the Rotary Club as a group of business and professional men who represent their vocations as per classification, one from each class. Rotary is highly organized, with its directors, official districts committees, etc.

Among the benefits belonging to Rotary he cited participation in fellowship, development of friendliness, broadening of the knowledge of each other's work, problems and successes, the quickening of the desire to be of service to others, the obtaining a new view of one's own business, an opportunity to co-operate in the advancement of understanding, good will and international peace, and the true realization of Rotary's motto, "Service before Self."

Rotary, founded in February 1905 by Paul Harris, had sixteen clubs in 1910 (the first one in Canada being Winnipeg) has so rapidly grown that it now has 4900 clubs with 202,500 members in more than eighty countries. Even a hasty view of Rotary must impress one with its magnificence and importance. So great a phenomenon has not casually happened. It had its origin and development as a response to certain human needs. Paul Harris was lonely, and he and his little group met together to enjoy the contact of mind with mind, and as they shared their thoughts and feelings more and more intimately acquaintance ripened into friendship, friendship prompted the doing of little acts of kindness for one another, and along with the pleasures of companionship, the taste of the joy of service unselfishly rendered.

Rotarian Rogers then discussed the philosophy of Rotary and explained how each of the objects were adopted.

He also told how Rotary raises business to a high plane by redeeming it from its besetting sin and making it satisfying to the moral sense, as well as to the de-
