Sir Herbert Holt Retires From Presidency Royal Bank

MONTREAL, Nov. 30.—After 26 years in office, Sir Herbert S. Holt has relinquished the presidency of the Royal Bank of Canada and now becomes Chairman of the Board and Chairman of the Executive Committee.

These changes were announced at the end of the bank's fiscal year today, following a regular meeting of the Board. They are changes which constitute not only an important milestone in the 65 years of Royal Bank history but also an event of national significance.

When he was appointed President in the following year, the Royal Bank was recognized as being soundly established upon long adherence to the conservative principles of its inception. It was not, however, outstanding in the extent of its activities and it was under Sir Herbert's leadership that the bank entered a new period of steady growth which gradually made it one of the leading banks of the world, international in scope and influence.

An elderly and very generously-built woman ploughed towards us through the crowds of tired home-goers. Some yards behind followed a little man in a bowler hat, struggling wearily with two suitcases, a large parcel, and an umbrella.

We have in modern life—which must necessarily contain many subtleties from ancient and medieval life—a number of symbols. They are mainly the names of things that used to be in common use either for purposes of lighting, of worship or of economic independence, but which in themselves have fallen into disuse, while their names are retained as symbols of our highest endeavors.

BRITISH AID

Daric stressed the danger of a surprise attack by Germany through Switzerland. He said Germany has established a "sports" camp at Tübingen near the Swiss border, where university students are taught to drive motorized equipment in military formation. The possibility of alienating Great Britain through close cooperation with Russia, was argued by Daric who wrote there also was the possibility such an entente would enmesh France in Russo-Japanese quarrels.

our plan based on the above policy and at the same time toward conclusion of a new and reasonable treaty. It is to be hoped that Great Britain, the United States and other powers concerned will see the equity and justice of our claim and that a new naval pact will be brought into being to insure and promote world peace. I am not at liberty to give further details now because developments in preliminary conversations are to be held confidentially, but I expect to be able to say more on the subject upon another occasion.

WEDDING SIDELIGHTS

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire) LONDON, Nov. 29.—The Empire's Capital was packed with throngs made happy by the marriage of the Duke of Kent and Princess Marina, but London was not the only place where British subjects celebrated.

British warships all over the world fired a 21-gun salute at high noon. Their sailors had an extra lot of rum with which they toasted the Royal couple's health.

Millions of people lost sleep in order to hear the wedding ceremony broadcast all over the world. The ceremony in Westminster Abbey was witnessed by 1,500 invited guests.

It was a typical London November day, with dull grey skies and occasional drizzles of rain that failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the vast crowds, patiently waiting hours to catch a glimpse of the happy couple.

Their loudest cheers were reserved for the lovely smiling bride herself as she was taken to the Abbey and for the couple when they emerged.

The Duke made responses in a firm, ringing voice, but the bride spoke so softly few could hear her.

It was foggy and cold in London, but King George's third son, the Duke of Gloucester, experienced heat from the sun as he drove to his wedding day. Prince Henry was in Newcastle, N.S.W., 12,000 miles from home.

The wedding cake was nine feet high and the bride and groom alight with the Duke's sword—not because it was too big to be cut with an ordinary knife but because it is the custom.

King George and his three sons present, including the Duke of Kent, wore full dress naval uniforms.

There was no "best man" but the Prince of Wales served in the capacity, taking care of the bride's bouquet when she knelt and handing his youngest brother the gold wedding ring without a slip.

DUKE OF KENT

"I will." To Princess Marina, radiantly beautiful in her silver lame gown, the Archbishop said: "Marina, wilt thou have this man to thy wedded husband, to live together after God's ordinance in the holy estate of matrimony? Wilt thou obey him and serve him, love, honor and keep him in sickness and health; and forsaking all others, keep thee only unto him so long as ye both shall live?"

Princess Marina's voice was small and soft as, lifting her face to the Archbishop, she replied: "I will." The two then plighted their troth, the Duke repeating after the Archbishop:

"I, George Edward Alexander Edmund, take thee, Marina, to my wedded wife, to have and to hold from this day forward, for richer or poorer, in sickness and in health, to love and to cherish, till death do us part, according to God's holy ordinance; and thereto I plight thee my troth."

Princess Marina said the same words, substituting her name and that of the Duke, and saying at the end "I give thee my troth."

The words died away and, amid an eloquent hush, the bridegroom took the golden wedding ring from the hand of his bride, the Duke of Kent, and placed it upon Princess Marina's finger, repeating after the Archbishop:

"With this ring I thee wed, with my body I thee worship, and with all my worldly goods I thee endow; in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen." As the first words were said Queen Mary brushed her eyes. King George, standing with his hand resting on the hill of his shining sword, looked straight forward.

A choir of 70 voices chanted melodious "Amen's" to two prayers that followed, after which the couple moved slowly to the altar, decorated with costly golden plates and altar pieces, there kneeling again as the bridegroom repeated the words of the Lord's Prayer, in which many of the congregation joined.

According to the Church of England ritual, the Duke of Kent promised to "love, comfort, honor, and keep" Marina while the Princess vowed to "obey, serve, love, honor, and keep" her husband.

LEAGUE'S PEACE

Calvo denied this interpretation, which would mean the Bolivian military command unwittingly played into the hands of Paraguay by detaching the President.

Meanwhile Asuncion, the Capital of Paraguay, was overjoyed by reports that Bolivian military resistance had collapsed as a result of internal dissension.

The political situation at La Paz, together with Paraguay's advance in the field, was believed to spell the doom of the League of Nations peace proposals elaborated at Geneva, inasmuch as Paraguayan military possession of the entire area is now likely.

It remained conjectural where Paraguay would halt her armies if the Bolivian retirement is as serious as reported from Asuncion, some quarters holding the Paraguayans would go no further than the 6th Meridian.

The two were taken into custody by the state's attorney's police who gave out their names as Charles Gideon, 21, Loveland, Okla., and Miss Opal Caton of Chicago. The man was apprehended just after midnight on a St. Louis bus and the woman was in a car outside the Union Bus Station waiting for him.

For the brown sugar crispies in the menu above, cook one cup sweetened condensed milk and three tablespoons brown sugar in the top of a double boiler until thick. Remove from the fire and add three cups corn flakes and one-half cup chopped walnuts. Mix thoroughly and drop by teaspoons on to a well-greased cookie sheet or inverted pan. Bake for ten minutes or until brown in a moderate oven. This makes two dozen cookies.
