

Card To The Electors

Ladies and Gentlemen, Electors of the City of Charlottetown;—

Not wishing to seem premature but being convinced that there is no time like the present, I take advantage of this opportunity of making known my position, re Civic Politics.

I have been interviewed by many prominent citizens and believing them to be good judges of the Civic pulse, after due consideration I have decided to nominate as a Candidate for Mayoralty honours at the forth-coming Civic Election.

My record for the past two years is an open book. I have endeavoured to give to the City my best and have tried to uphold the dignity of the office. Having had a most strenuous two years, I am of the opinion that a second term may be in order.

If I have the honour to be re-elected, I can assure you Ladies and Gentlemen, I shall as before have the best interests of our City and Citizens at heart, ever endeavouring to promote any and every feasible measure that may arise, whereby our City may be benefited.

I thank you most heartily for your support in the past and the many honours shown me.

It is almost impossible for me to interview you all personally, I therefore take this opportunity of soliciting a continuance of your confidence and your votes.

I remain
Yours respectfully
G. D. WRIGHT

SANDRA THE JEALOUS

By Jane Phelps

A REALIZATION AND A PLEA

Everett did not once speak to me all through dinner. I felt my thoughts disordered, confused. Had I again been wrong? I dared not try to make conversation before Thomas; I did not know what I might say. My brain was not sufficiently collected. Had it not been that Miss Pierce had seemed so eagerly to welcome my presence, I should still have doubted them. But she was unaffectedly glad to see me, so anxious to consult me, that I did not know what to think.

It shot across my mind, as we sat there silent, how strange it was that one human being should have so little sympathy with another. I felt that Everett was all out of sympathy with me—not because of my action in condemning him—my unfair criticism, but because he did not love me as he should.

I felt some way that things had come to a crisis. That Everett would perhaps hate me because of my uncalled for trade, my spying, I knew his ideas upon such subjects. He had no patience with anyone who did such things.

The thought of Everett's love for that other woman who had been his wife, had done to me like a vicious web. I had struggled against it, but it had enveloped me, poisoning my life. I never had been able to shake it from me.

I had been unfair to him in allowing myself to become so enmeshed in jealousy for her, that I had made me unhappy, so annoying him—even though he knew not the reason. I had been unfair in regard to his acquaintance with Irma Barton and others—proved wrong in my suspicions. And now that I had been unjust about Miss Pierce? If I had what had I to find fault with? Quickly into my mind leaped the answer:

"The love I long for is not mine!" Then followed the thought: "I have heard that one can really love by once. Perhaps Everett gives me all he has to give."

So, hurried by such thoughts, I excused myself when we had finished and went to hear what Miss Pierce had to say.

"I think I never read so selfish a letter as was the one from her step-mother. At once all my anger against the girl, and against Everett, died away."

"I should not think of going if I were you!" I told her. "Your step-mother simply wants you to wait upon her, and do the laundry. You say she is perfectly well?"

"Oh, yes, she's always been healthy. She is younger than father and will dance all night. But she hates to do anything about the house. I do hope it is right for me to stay. I love Junior so it would break my heart to leave him. Then too—" she flushed.

"Father can't afford to pay me anything, hardly afford to dress me. I hate to give up my independence."

"It isn't your duty, Mr. Graham thinks as I do," I replied and was rewarded by such a gush of tears it frightened me. The poor girl had been worrying for fear we would tell her that her duty lay with her step-mother.

After I had comforted her, I went downstairs to Everett.

"Well?" he said.

"Miss Pierce showed me the letter. I told her to stay," I answered, ashamed and wanting to say so, but not knowing quite how.

"Haven't you anything to say to me?"

"Only to ask your forgiveness for my suspicions. But—"

"I forgive you, Sandra, because you see not the fault-finding suspicious kind usually. But my dear, haven't you yet learned to trust me? Haven't I proved myself to you?"

"Yes—but."

"But what?"

"I made no answer, although the words I so longed, yet hated, to say, trembled on my lips."

"But what dear?" he asked again. "But you don't love me!"

As I spoke the tears came in a perfect flood. All the pent-up emotion of the years of jealous, misgiving, poured out in that flood of tears and heart-racking sobs.

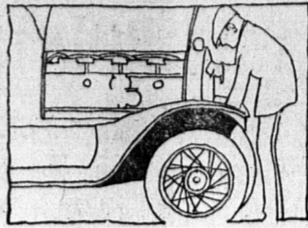

"I don't love you? Why, Sandra, who do you mean?" he asked as he took me in his arms, and wiped my eyes.

HINTS FOR The Motorist

BY ALBERT L. CLOUGH

NON-FREEZING LIQUID

W. B. asks: What is the best thing to use in an auto radiator to keep it from freezing? If I use this shall I have to draw off the liquid on cold nights?

Answer: We advise you to use denatured alcohol with the water and suggest that you make a mixture of one-third denatured alcohol and two-thirds water and fill the cooling system of your car with it, after drawing off the water completely. This will prevent danger from freezing down to zero or a little below, and it will not be necessary to draw your radiator on cold nights. As the alcohol will gradually steam away, you will have to add more of it from time to time instead of putting in water when filling is required.

WHAT KIND OF A KNOCK IS THIS?

W. H. D. writes: My engine knocks when it is pulling hard, as when the car is climbing a steep hill, but does not do so on level going. What kind of a knock do you suppose this is?

Answer: This knock due to deposits of carbon on the piston heads and other internal parts is the most common variety and, if your engine has been run for a long time without being cleaned out, you should now have this done. The carbon knock is rather sharp and clanking and cannot be stopped by retarding the spark. If any of the moving parts are loose, the use of too lean a mixture will cause a knock. Heavy pounding occurs if there is looseness in the main bearings or engine supports and lighter knocking when connecting rod bearings or wrist pins are worn. Insufficient piston lubrication or worn pistons produce knocking and many engines are now inclined to knock, from no defect of their own, but simply on account of the fuel now in use. In the case of an engine free from carbon deposits, with spark properly timed and a correct fuel mixture, looseness in the main bearings is the commonest cause of heavy knocks.

CONNECTING AMMETER FOR TESTING

W. T. asks: In connecting another ammeter into circuit on a car, for the purpose of testing the accuracy of the ammeter installed in the car, how is the test ammeter attached?

Answer: Disconnect from the car ammeter the wire which leads for the battery to it and connect this wire to one terminal of the test instrument, running a short wire from the free terminal of one instrument to the free terminal of the other. In case the test instrument reads opposite to the car ammeter, reverse the connections of the former instrument.

RECEPTION TO RETURNED HERO

On Wednesday, November 19th a very enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Mrs. Hector Gerrard, New Argyle, when the neighbors of the vicinity met to welcome back her son, William, who recently returned from overseas. An address of welcome was then read by Miss Sarah MacEachern, while Miss Annie MacKinnon presented him with a silver ring. Mr. Gerrard made a fitting response thanking the people, one and all for their kindness shown to him. Mr. Colin MacEachern, ably acted as chairman and a short though interesting programme was rendered as follows:

Chorus, "We'll never let the old flag fall"; Welcome, by Miss Charlotte MacDonald; Recitation by Miss Daisy MacNeill; Duet, by the Misses Pearl and Maggie Stewart; Solo, by Mr. Colin MacEachern; Solo by Mr. Neil A. MacKinnon; Gramophone selections were also contributed by Mr. Alex MacQuarrie.

The ladies furnished baskets and a beautiful repast was served to all present after which games and other amusements were carried out until the small hours of the morning when the crowd dispersed by singing for her a jolly good fellow and Auld Lang Syne. The happy gathering was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

The address is as follows: Dear Friends—We, your friends and neighbours assemble here tonight to extend to you our heartiest welcome on your arrival home from serving your King and Country. Words cannot convey to you our appreciation for your service for us across the seas. You heard your country's call and bravely answered it, and left your bright home, your mother, sister, and friends to defend us against the most tyrannical and ruthless foe that the world has ever been called upon to oppose. Although God has spared you from mingling in the dreadful conflicts, and scenes of bloodshed in which so many of your brave comrades gave up their lives for the victory and freedom which we now enjoy, we feel certain that you would have acted your part and manfully and nobly done your duty, had you been called upon to face the enemy.

Should the "Call to Arms" again be sounded over our fair Dominion we are confident and proud that our noble soldier boys will again do their duty for home and loved ones, as well as King and Country.

With feelings of pride and pleasure we welcome you back again in our midst and not forgetting to give thanks to Him with gave us the Victory.

Please accept from us this small token, which is only a slight appreciation for your future welfare.

DEATH OF H. CLAY FRICK

NEW YORK, December 2.—Henry Clay Frick, millionaire steel manufacturer, died here this morning. Mr. Frick suffered at attack of ptomaine poisoning early in November. He had nearly recovered from this when serious complications developed. He was 69 years old. The career of Henry Clay Frick has formed one of the most fascinating chapters in the romance of industry in the United States. A boy on a farm in a family of only ordinary means, he was, at his fortune, like those of Carnegie and Rockefeller, was largely a matter of guesswork, even to himself. It has been said he was worth more than $100,000,000, perhaps has much as $200,000,000.

Mr. Frick built up the greatest coke business in the world, and acquired such vast interests in steel that he was also one of the principal magnates in that industry, and in rounding out his career he became known as one of the world's greatest collectors of master paintings.
