"THE FIRST QUARREL"

Thursday, December 21st.

"All right," I answered dully. We drove home in Jonathan's car. The remainder of the family went as they came, in our machine. The door of the motor had barely closed when Jonathan began.

"There's one thing we may as well clear up, right now, young lady," he said. "You've played your last game of cat and mouse! It's all well enough for the young fools who've been camping on your train for the past year and tea dancing you all over New York but it won't work with me! It won't work with me! Remember that!"

"That trick the other night was the last you'll pull of that sort!" He thumped the heavy cushions angrily. "The last, I say! It cost me over four thousand dollars, all told, to get that girl to substitute for you! And she knows what it would have cost if I had to go through with the thing! Invitations out! City buzzing with the fact that I had a ring made! Then call it off and confess that I— Jonathan Grey—" he began to rave. His flabby round face seemed to be larger and flabbier than ever. In that instant I glimpsed the Jonathan Grey whom Wall Street knew—subtle, truculent, hard.

"Confess that I," he began again, "louder than before, "had been thrown down by some little brainless chit—!"

"Here after I know what you're going to do. You do no more racing out of the house leaving me to the schemes and plan to cover your tracks and present a decent front!"

"No more of it, I say, or I'll ball and chain you!"

"While he talked I sat with my hands loosely fiddled in my lap. I looked coolly through the bevelled glass of the motor to the snow covered ground. Though at times he seemed on the verge of physical violence I had not the least sense of fear. "Do you hear me?" he threatened.

"Answer me!"

"I heard you," I said.

Jonathan snorted. I think of all the weak, undignified things I have discovered about him, that was the most significant of them. That I wasn't impressed by his outburst wounded his vanity. For Jonathan is vain!

He silently helped me out of the car and mumbled something about seeing me again as he showed me into the house.

"Now stay there awhile!" he growled as he closed the door between us.

I was sitting alone in front of the fire, my wraps still on, when the others came. "What—Jonathan gone?" Mamma was thoroughly surprised.

"Yes," I said. "I was watching Dad cross the room and go silently toward the stairway. His shoulders seemed a little stooped."

"How does it feel," she asked, "how does it feel to be engaged?" Else had flung her furs on the lounge and was dancing up and down in front of my chair.

"I stared at her, her tampering and lovely, in her rose-white youth and then:

"Like—h" I said.

Mamma gasped.

"I mean it!" My voice roughened into a laugh. I sat a second longer while Else made a wry face at me and I returned it, then I went upstairs to my room.

The air that rushed out as I opened the door was fragrant. I switched on the light. There on my dressing table were two bouquets, one daffodils and the other pink roses.

A note with the daffodils was addressed to me in the bold, staid hand of Mrs. Larry.

"With the pink roses there was no signature, merely the lines—

"And in the flame which on the altar glows
Eternal love will shine
And every fitful breeze that blows
Will waft a prayer of mine
For you, my dear.

That was all.

"FAIR AND FRAIL"

Friday, December 22nd.

Roses! And a fragment of that waltz song! No signature was needed! I lifted them out of the vase and, wet, held them close against my bodice. My Stranger! For the first time since the beginning of this difficult period tears were on the

I remember wondering just before my eyes closed, just why I am marrying Jonathan at all, and getting with the thought, a mental vision of my Dad's slightly stooped shoulders as he walked away from me. I think that is the thing more than Mama's haranguing which is carrying me on into this thing with Jonathan. It's a passive influence. I seem to feel a duty, yet scarcely knowing why, because surely it's not my fault that our financial basis is a shaky one. And, in the general acceptance of things, neither do I owe anyone support or a living.

Perhaps it is after all that I am, myself, afraid to face life and its complexities, unfortified by wealth! And I, wonder, one of those fair frail women, who never become more than the pawns of luxury?

This morning has been a riot of flowers and gifts and telephone calls. Everyone seems to want to wish me well.

A thousand times I have heard Mamma at the telephone, gushing to some friend, painting my future in glowing colors—while I, through it all—I can see only the face of that other man!

ORIME, INSANITY, AND ALCOHOL GO HAND IN HAND

Senator Copeland of New York says that "Crime in the United States costs three times more than education, ten times more than maintaining the army and navy, and four times more than the expense of controlling the Federal Government. It represents one-fourth of the national income."

We know that crime is a great factor in the moral and economic life of any country; and would conclude that it is the duty of all loyal citizens to find out and seek to free our social and national life from anything and everything that leads people to commit crime.

The editor of the National Home Monthly (March 1934) writes: "Clearly the first care should be to insure that children have the right parentage. The figures that show the relationship between mental deficiency and crime are very confusing but they are definite enough to justify legislation which will effectually bar the feeble-minded from adding their offspring to the population of the country."

In the April issue of the Chateleine, Constance Templeton writes about "Canada's Lost Population," pointing out the seriousness of the situation, re insanity in our Dominion, and suggesting sterilization as a check to its growth.

If such drastic steps are necessary, would it not be wise to consider other contributing causes of insanity and by legislation and education endeavor to overcome them? Some years ago, Lord Shaftsbury, who was Chairman of the Commission on Lunacy for England for many years declared that "Sixty per cent of people come to asylums through drink." Unless the medical and political world have been able, through scientific research, to prove that he was wrong, are we not justified in asking that the school, the press and every means of education be used to overcome this evil?

The Benefits of Club Work

Essay by J. Alfred Handrahan of The Tignish Calf Club

A firm foundation to an enterprise of any nature is necessary for its progress and ultimate existence. The fundamental principles must be thoroughly understood if the business is to attain success. In Prince Edward Island today Agriculture stands as one of our leading industries. Its ascendancy to a higher level than that which it now enjoys depends to a large degree on our young farmers getting knowledge in the rudiments of this art and supplying its principles with proficiency. In many sections of Prince Edward Island great benefits are being received from Agriculture through the medium of club work. This organization is helping to promote a wider and more thorough education along agricultural lines and its members through competition are improving the quality of their livestock each year. When fair day comes around there is a feeling of pride given them a feeling of purpose, but also a sum of money to encourage their future efforts. To foster a spirit of unity and to increase its membership these clubs are working hard and each new member adds a spark to the fiery progress of this worthy organization. The benefits I have derived from being a member of our local club are many. I have learned many points in the line of proper various methods that should be exercised in bringing them along to a championship.

Through practice, observation, and study, I am now quite competent in judging livestock, having taken at the last annual fair first prize for this work. Aside from these benefits, I have gained much knowledge in the method of procedure at public meetings. This is helpful to any young man as some day his ambitions might lead him to prominent position in the field of public speaking where the art of public speaking is a very important one which I am a helper has benefited and will benefit greatly through the application of the knowledge I have gained since becoming a member of this Club. The acquisition of this stock has shown us the error of our ways in keeping scrub stock where half the number of the superior type gives less work and greater profits. In the light of this we have undertaken a process of culling so that at present the entire stock will rank on par with our high grade club specimens.

The formation of this club and the keen competition of its members to carry off major prizes at the annual fair has given birth to a great ambition and a larger and more only to myself but an interest not only to our household. Last year when I won first honours at the fair in the calf exhibit my family was proud of me and encouraged me to continue and strive for further honours. They look forward to the meetings and all the home and take a lively interest in our discussions. They realize that this work is educational and their interest and encouragement is most gratifying. Many happy hours are spent in the field discussing the pros and cons of a subject debated at a past meeting.

To the community and its citizenship the existence of this club is a benefit in as much as it only the healthy of raising better stock and a better brand of live stock. Cutting the cost of production and maintenance to a minimum is a salient factor in the net profits gained from any enterprise. As a result of the knowledge I have gained through the medium of my club I have applied the principles outlined in its teachings the acquisition of a superior line of stock and a culling out process of the inferior type. I have from an economic standpoint made greater profits with less expense. To prove this I might add that one cow of type I have obtained through the Club brings me in more than two of the original stock.

To the live stock industry as a whole in our community our club has proven conclusively that the system in the past has been all wrong and steps are gradually being taken to bring it up to a standard of quality consistent with the rule that guides our club members.

The old saying that "In unity there is strength" is applicable here in reference to the co-operative benefits derived from the formation of our clubs. Working for a common cause yet striving to out-do each other in competitive measures each member is doing his utmost to make this undertaking a success and through united efforts mould it into an organization that will reflect credit on the community in which it is established and cause each member and their immediate families to be proud indeed of an achievement that was given birth when the club was formed and which is now driving ahead to success and creating a new era in the sphere of Agriculture.

W. C. T. U. Notes

THE BURDEN OF THE HOUR

God broke our years to hours and days, that Hour by hour
And day by day
We get going on a little way,
We might be able all along
To keep quite strong.
Should all the weight of life
Be laid across our shoulders, and
The future, rife
With woe and struggle, meet us
Face to face.
At just one place
We would not go;
Our feet would stop; and so
God lays a little on us every day
And never, I believe, on all the
Will burdens bear so deep
Or pinways lie so steep—
But we can go if by God's power,
We only bear the burden of the hour.

—George Klingbe.

WHY IS SOVIETISM A MENACE TO THE CHRISTIAN COUNTRIES

First because it disguises itself as Liberty and Equality and makes its appeal to and for the downtrodden.

Second because it flouts Law and Order and defies decency. Because it aims to destroy all that civilization holds sacred—marriage, home, the family ties and the love and worship of God.

The factor we must fear most is its Atheistic teaching because on this belief in God the True Being rests all our other things. True it endeavors to reach the heathen nations by offering "Freedom" and in our own land to the unwary independence of thought but underneath all it is Anti-Christian and Anti-Social.

Mrs. Maud Howe in "A Challenge Answered" says: "Atheism as defined by the dictionary is not the belief of all who call themselves Atheists. To meet the wider claim, we have the three following examples: Dogmatic Atheism that denies the existence of God, Negative Atheism that denies the existence of God, Critical or Cultural Atheism (Agnosticism) that doubts the existence of God."

Greek Orthodox may have been shrouded in mysticism, may have been dogmatic, even cruel and unlovely, but we know their knowledge, that they still held belief in a Supreme Being. The year 1928 saw the union of all the Atheistic societies, including the Anti-Christian for the Advancement of Atheism. It remained for the Soviets to try to blot out the name of God from church and state by political action and despite this there are so-called Christian people who claim that this is an effort to elevate these people to a higher plane of living.

The Anti-Religious Movement is politically recognized, the Association of the G. less.

In a recent copy of the Evangelical Christian two views were given of Bolshevism. The first was by a group of British business and financial men who visited Russia and who were personally conducted and saw what the Bolsheviki leaders wanted them to see. They were feled and flattered and told what they had seen. Meantime they were being unknown to any and sent back to England a picture given to the London Times. It was indescribable. There is no home life in Russia. A Government which preached the brotherhood of man and spends enormous sums of money on spreading propaganda abroad would do better to spend that money in looking after its aged, its cripples, its infirm."

In our own land there arose a questioning age old: "How can these things be? A philosophy questioning the meticulous which found fruitage in disbelief in God's power and in the Deity of Jesus Christ."

Once let this doubt become established and there will soon follow the denial of the Resurrection and if we have not this HOPE, "we are of all men most miserable." I Cor. 15, 19.

Atheism does not need to be

A Tired, Worn Out Woman Can't Make a Happy Home

There is no happiness in the home when the mother is sick and worried by the never ending household duties. She gets run down and becomes nervous and irritable, has shortness of breath, faint and dizzy, can't sleep, and gets up in the morning feeling as tired as she went to bed, and is downhearted and discouraged.

Milburn's H. & N. Pills will soon convince women it is not necessary to suffer, as they build up the nervous system and bring back the former health and vigor.

Tuberculosis Mortality Rate Up

A disquieting piece of news on this subject was made public last May at the annual meeting in Atlantic City of the National Tuberculosis Association. It appears that within the last five years there has been a great increase in the mortality rate from tuberculosis among girls between fourteen and nineteen years of age. Young girls have always been in particular danger from this terrible disease. Five years ago the death rate among girls of this age group was fifty per cent. higher than the death rate among boys of the same ages. In the last five years it has advanced to a point one hundred per cent. higher than the death rate among boys.

What causes this alarming condition no one can say positively. The doctors in conference at Atlantic City gave varying explanations. Late hours, the stress of industrial employment, a foolish diet, to refrain from using tobacco in any form. Yale football players are not allowed to use tobacco during the active training season.

Ty Cobb: "Cigarette smoking stupefies the brain, saps vitality, undermines one's health, and lessens the moral fibre of the man. No boy who hopes to be successful in any line can afford to contract a habit that is so detrimental to his physical and moral development."
