INSANE ARE BURNED TO DEATH IN A LARGE LONDON ASYLUM

Fifty-Two Fatalities By A Fire At A London Asylum—Many of the Patients Died In Their Beds—Nurses and Doctors Worked Heroically to Save Their Charges But In Many Cases Their Efforts Were Futile.

LONDON, Feb. 1.—Not since September, 1887, when the Eborac Theatre was burned down, has such a disastrous fire occurred in England as that which broke out a few mornings at Colney Hatch Asylum. Indeed, the loss of life was greater than any fire within the area of London in nearly two centuries. The fire was discovered at 5.30 in the morning in a temporary annex, crowded with female insane patients. As the flames had to feed mainly on wood, they spread with the utmost rapidity.

The majority of the inmates utterly failed to realize the danger, and many of them were seen burning in their beds, right under the eyes of the helpless officials. Others escaped into the grounds in a naked condition, none had more than a nightdress on, and not a few rushed out of the building enveloped in flames. The attendants did all in their power to save the poor, demented creatures, whose shrieks were pitiable in the extreme.

In an hour the tragedy was over and fifty-two lives had been lost. The local fire brigade complained bitterly of the inadequate supply of water, and condemned the authorities for herding the lunatics together in a building constructed entirely of wood. The disaster has created a profound impression in London.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—Fifty-two insane women patients were burned to death by a fire at the Colney Hatch Asylum this morning. The outbreak occurred in the Jewish wing of the institution.

The flames spread with great rapidity and before they could be got under control five wooden buildings, including dormitories and the doctors' apartments were gutted. All the efforts of the officials were directed to removing the insane inmates, but the latter became wild with excitement and so panic-stricken that not only were they unable to help themselves, but greatly impeded the operations of those trying to save them.

There were nearly 600 women in the burned annex at the time the fire was discovered, and most of them were safely transferred to the main building, which was uninjured. All the victims were lunatics. Their charred remains presented a horrifying spectacle. The asylum was besieged by anxious relatives or friends of the patients, who arrived from all quarters. Pitiable scenes were witnessed, as weeping men and women left the premises after ascertaining that relatives or friends had perished in the flames.

The nurses had a terrible experience in trying to assist the insane people, who were so panic-stricken that they had literally to be driven to a place of safety. The inflammable premises almost immediately became a furious furnace. Nothing was left standing. The corrugated iron roofs of the dormitories and the beds of the patients were melted by the intense heat. Some of the lunatics were burned while in bed, and the charred remains of others were found huddled together in corners, while groups of partially consumed bodies on the site of the corridors showed that many persons lost their lives and sacrificed those of others in their frantic efforts to force a passage through the flames to the main building.
