IT'S POOR ECONOMY TO RISK FAILURES WITH INFERIOR BAKING POWDER. MAGIC NEVER VARIES. THAT'S WHY I RECOMMEND IT FOR ALL RECIPES CALLING FOR BAKING POWDER.

A BOY'S FIRST ROOM

I've got a room, now, by myself. A room very own. It has a door that I can shut. And there are all alone; It has a shelf, a closet, too. A window just for me.

And books where I can keep my clothes As neat as neat can be. A lovely paper on the wall; If I had known how fine it was, I'd had a room before.

I like to go there after school. Away from everyone; I felt—well—sort of scared at first. But now I think it's fun. The voices of the folks downstairs seem faint and far away.

I hear the rain upon the roof; I watch the birds at play; Oh, yes, it's often very still. At night there's not a sound— But I let mother in, of course, When bedtime comes around.

FEEL POTATOES AFTER THEY HAVE BEEN BOILED OR STEAMED. THEY WILL BE MUCH MORE PALATABLE AND THE BEST PART OF THE VEGETABLE WILL BE EATEN, INSTEAD OF BEING THROWN AWAY.

A stock pot should be in every kitchen, and all such scraps put into it, the resulting liquid being used for making soups and gravies after being strained.

Five cents' worth of bones will start the stock pot, and it is a good plan to start one fresh every Monday.

RELEASE

A long line must be drawn on the ground or scratched in the sand and someone, who is called the "guard" stands on it. The other children must run about near the line and, if the guard touches any of them, he places them behind the line as prisoners.

Children shout "Release! Release!" and their friends must try to rescue them. If any of the rescuers are touched they are also imprisoned.

IN MEMORY OF NELSON

The black scarves which sailors wear under their collars is a sign of mourning for Lord Nelson, the world's greatest admiral. The order for the wearing of these scarves was made when the Victory, almost a floating wreck, entered Gibraltar, and to this day remains uncancelled. Many think that the white lines on a sailor's collar signify three of Nelson's greatest victories, but there is no definite evidence of this. The collar itself came into use when sailors wore their hair in a pigtail and dirtied the collars so often that they quickly detachable one was adopted.

WASTE IN ANY FORM IS UNFORGIVABLE AND THERE ARE DOZENS OF INTERESTING WAYS IN WHICH ONE CAN ECONOMIZE.

An air tight jar for instance should be kept in every kitchen for keeping scraps of cheese.

A dash of grated cheese adds to the piquancy of tomato or beef soups. These fingers made from the scraps of pastry left over from

WISE PARENT REALIZES VALUE OF DISCIPLINE

Recently I saw one of the naughtiest children I have ever set eye on, writes a doctor. It was clear that his mother could do nothing with him. He was brought to me because of a tummy-ache; but it soon was obvious that the tummy-ache was purely a put-up job as a means of getting out of doing something his mother had wanted him to do.

When I had finished looking at the child I asked the mother whether she did not find him somewhat of a handful and that he required a good scolding.

"Scolding!" she repeated, in rather an offended voice. "I never scold him; that is entirely the wrong way to bring up children."

I saw she was the type in which arguing could do no good so I said no more.

"Children should be allowed to develop naturally; parents should

CHAPTER 34 NEWS INDEED!

Jeanne continued to sit before the telephone after Barstow's ringing off in a huff, staring pensively at the transmitter.

She was a trifle uneasy, although the situation brought a ghost of a smile to her curved lips as she recalled what she had coaxed into that very transmitter.

She had been, Oh! so innocent of offense in accepting Canby's invitation, she had told Barstow . . . she really didn't know that he considered her engaged to him for dinner that evening . . . nothing had been said definitely . . . she had supposed that he had some stag affair on . . .

Whether or not her ingenious story had got across with Vic, Jeanne was unable to say. She rather thought it had, and that he was merely enraged at the thought of a revival, without actually blaming her . . . She hoped such was the case at any rate, for she realized that, until her engagement to him was publicly announced, she had a rather indefinite claim on him from any standpoint except the purely romantic one . . .

Just to be on the safe side, she stopped at the telephone booth on her way down to Canby's car and sent a message to Henry Harrison declaring her need for immediate assistance, and suggesting that he manage to raise more money on her holdings entrusted to his care.

Of course, she realized that she would have nothing left on which to fall back if her plan to marry Barstow fell through.

A Morning Smile

They took their seats in the carriage. Mac took out his pipe and lit it, and Sandy produced a cigar. "Hello, mon," said Mac, "where did ye get that cigar?" "A body gave it to me," replied Sandy, preparing to light it. "A fr-r-iend?" asked Mac. "I dinna ken," replied the other. "I haven't smoked it yet."

The waitress who had taken the man's order some time ago now returned to his table deep in meditation. "Ah," said the customer brightly, "a penny for your thoughts, young lady." The girl raised a pair of worried eyes. "Well, sir," she said, "we are very busy today, and I was just wondering whether you were a stewed rabbit or a boiled fowl!"

never punish or frighten them or try in any way to interfere with the natural development of their characters," she said, and left me to contemplate on how dangerous a little knowledge can be.

It is, of course, utter nonsense to suppose that a child can be brought up properly without a certain amount of well guided discipline. Having no sense of values or standards, the child who is not to be told what is right or wrong. Later discipline may be replaced by persuasion and later still he may be allowed to judge more and more for himself.

The skillful reader is the one who sees just how gradually she can relax the guiding rein.

PORTAGED WIFE

Dorothy Dix's Letter Box

How to Win the Girl You Want—Woman Who Made Loveless Marriage Must Make the Best of It—Will Girl Prove Poor Wife Because Her Friends Love?

Dear Dorothy Dix—You are constantly telling women in your column "to get their man." Why not tell us eligible bachelors a sure way to get the girl we want?
RUSSELO.

Answer:
The difference between a girl going husband-hunting and a man going wife-hunting is the difference between trying to catch a bird on the wing and a barnyard fowl. To get a husband, a girl needs all the tips she can get about ammunition and marksmanship and what spots are most vulnerable in her quarry in order to bring down her game, but all that a man needs is to hold out his hand and give a few chicks and the pretty little chicken on which he has his eye will come and eat out of his hand. So don't blame me if I try to help out my sister women and leave the men to work out their own salvation. The one needs advice, the other does not.

Besides, men have all the advantage in courtship. Custom and convention give a man the right to seek out the girl he desires, and then to use high-pressure salesmanship in selling himself to her. He can look over all over and make his choice, and then tell her not only how much he loves her but what a wonderful husband he would make, and how lucky she would be to get him.

But, the girl has no such break. All she can do is to sit around and keep her fingers crossed for luck, hoping that some man will happen to see her and that she will make a hit with him.

She may know the very man she would like for a husband, but she can't go to him and tell him that she has marked him for her own. The best she can do is to lay her traps and, likely as not, he will walk right through them without ever getting caught. If he tells him how much she loves him, she will scare him to death and he will run away, and she dare not even tell him what a good wife she would make him and how she would save his money and how well she would feed him, and so on. All of which is most unjust and unfair.

However, this doesn't answer your question about the best way to woo a girl. Of course, no specific rule can be given for that because it depends upon the girl. Some girls fall for one line, others for another. But, generally speaking, the way to get a girl is just to go after her tooth and nail hammer and tong, as you would after a big order or a political office or anything else that you really want.

A stormy, impetuous wooing goes big with ninety-nine girls out of a hundred because in their hearts nearly all women are still cave women. They would like for some bold wooer to come along and knock them over the head with a club and drag them off by their hair to his lair. It is the jagged lovers, the ones who do not put any pep into their courting, the ones who let girls shilly-shally with them, who lose out. Many a girl would like to say "no" instead of "yes," if only she dared to, to the bashful suitors who haven't even got the nerve to ask for what they want and force the girl actually to do the love making.

If you are in love with a girl, never take "no" for a final answer until she marries some other man. Success nearly always comes to the patient suitor. Just camp on your lady love's doorstep and always be Johnny-on-the-spot. Make yourself a necessity to her. Accustom her to little attentions.

Then suddenly some day remove yourself. Begin to rush some girl a little younger and a little prettier than she is, and it is a hundred-to-one shot that she will jump at you without knowing it she has fallen in love with you and that you are the great and only where she is concerned.

If a girl is very puritanical, a good line is getting her to reform you. Confess your sins to her, and the blacker you make them, the better she will like them and the more you will please her interest. Tell her you need her influence to lead you up to the higher life, and when she whispers that she will pray for you it is all over except sending out the wedding cards.

If she is modern, you can reverse the process and reform her. Register shoot over her cocktails and peeing and cigarettes, and when once you have constituted yourself her mentor you will have her tamed and broken so you can lead her to the altar.

If you want to make a hit with all girls, be neat in appearance, modest in demeanor, dance without stepping on their feet, be generous, but don't let them gold-dig you, talk to them about themselves, and, finally, be bold, but not too bold.

DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—When I was 20 my mother made me marry a man twice my age. I didn't love him and I have been miserable ever since. He doesn't make enough money for us to be comfortable on, and he has taken me to a city where I know nobody. I am not yet 30 and I am tired of it and do not feel that I can stand it. I long to be kidnapped and carried to the jungles of Africa, where I can hear the beasts roaring at each other. What shall I do?
LITTLE MRS. NOBODY.

Well, I should imagine that the beasts roaring at each other in the jungles of Africa haven't got anything on you in the way of the scrap that you put up in your little two-by-four flat. There are plenty of wives who are married to the families of African, where I can hear the beasts roaring at each other. What shall I do?

Expectant Mothers

need increased amounts of the "Vital 3" to prevent loss of teeth and nervous energy

A GROWING unborn infant makes heavy demands upon the expectant mother for bone-making calcium and phosphorus to form its skeleton. If the mother's every-day meals do not supply sufficient of these materials for both mother and infant, the infant robs the mother's bones and teeth of calcium and phosphorus. That is why child-birth so often causes bone weakness and the decay and loss of teeth.

The unborn infant also draws upon its mother for iron to such an extent that she needs to increase her daily consumption of this vital substance. It is for these reasons that Fellows' Syrup is of such value to expectant mothers. It supplies increased amounts of the "Vital 3"—Calcium, Phosphorus and Iron, together with other strengthening and invigorating mineral elements, such as sodium, potassium and manganese.

Particularly during the last few weeks of pregnancy, when the infant is growing rapidly larger and is taxing the mother heavily, Fellows' Syrup should be taken with every meal and at bed time, help keep up the mother's strength and vigor.

Physicians have prescribed Fellows' Syrup for 60 years. It is used in 52 different countries. Your druggist has it in two sizes. Make sure that the name FELLOWS is on the label—and get the Syrup with the "Vital 3."

FELLOWS' SYRUP

World Famous COMPOUND OF HYPOPHOSPHITES

Here are the directions for it:

- 3 cups cranberries
- 1 cup seeded raisins
- 1 1/4 cups sugar
- 1 cup water
- 2 teaspoons flour
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon almond or vanilla extract

Chop cranberries; add other ingredients. Line a deep pie plate with pie crust; add filling; cover with an upper crust. Salt or perforate with fork to permit steam to escape, and press the edges closely together. Bake in a moderate oven 30 to 40 minutes.

RAISIN FILLED HOT SANDWICH

The vogue of the toasted sandwich is one to which practically everyone subscribes. We have discovered so many delightful fillings to use in a sandwich that is served hot and savoury—as full of flavas as of satisfying qualities.

The recipe which in all its simplicity we offer you here, will have quite unusual character; you will find interest, too.

New Toasted Sandwich

- 1/2 cup seeded raisins
- 1 cup grated cheese
- 4 teaspoons pickle relish
- 4 teaspoons finely chopped onion

Wash raisins, drain and slice. Blend raisins with cheese, pickle relish and onion. Spread between buttered slices of bread. Toast on both sides. Serve hot. These may be prepared early and toasted just before serving. Sufficient for 8 sandwiches.

We must achieve it by devious ways. Some Table Talkers will employ canned cherries. Others will try to find that pleasant imitation that is rendered by a combination of cranberries and raisins.

This makes an excellent pie, whether or not it is related to the cherries of our early summer.

handwriting tucked into the pages of her geography. In high school, where there had been a French course, the notes had changed to "Je vous aime, ma chérie," and "Vous êtes beau d'un ange, Henri."

Henry Harrison had never shone as a French scholar. Nor as a lover either, thought Jeanne with a smile, as she nodded to Adele Parkinson's question.

"Do you two correspond? How amusing!"

"How nice, I call it!" returned Adele sharply. "I like your Westerner immensely. He is so big and clean and strong like a fresh wind that's blown over the Rockies! He lives that man! He doesn't just view life from an oyster fork. He doesn't know an club fork from a women aren't made only to be pawed, and gossiped about, and married just to hang the family jewels on."

Jeanne smiled amusedly. "He seems to have made a hit, my woolly Westerner!"

The young widow nodded vigorously.

"Twice he's sent me flowers," she acknowledged, "and we're carrying on a beautiful correspondence."

"Really? How delicious!" Jeanne's eyes opened wide. "No one would ever believe it of you!"

Mrs. Parkinson sighed and drew her Spanish shawl around her as if she were suddenly cold. They were standing in the lobby now, jostled by a scolding crowd.

"No, no one would ever think it of me! Everyone thinks I'm just a doll to be dressed in my best frock and walk and talk and laugh when I'm wound up. . . . Some day I'm going to run down there—God help me! she finished hurriedly in a low voice.
