"For about a year I was troubled with pimples and blackheads on my face and could not get rid of them. The pimples were in little blotches and were small and red. When they came to a head they were very sore and my face burned."

The Old Order Changes

By DAVID LYALL

The young couple were married as soon as the necessary formalities had been gone through, and chose London for their honeymoon.

The family holiday at Coppets resolved itself into Mrs. Freeland and Bee taking a fortnight at the Hotel Majestic at Scarborough, a delightful arrangement for the artful Bee, who had first suggested it.

Mary begged to be allowed to stay at home to look after her father and her grandmother, and said she could manage quite well alone, while Deborah also had a long delayed holiday.

Mrs. Freeland agreed to all these suggestions with surprising meekness, tasting for the first time the comfort of being legislated for.

There is no use denying that Freeland and Mary were extraordinarily happy at finding themselves alone together in the house.

His expression indicated that he had more ease of mind than he had enjoyed for a long time. The first thing Mary did was to fetch Granny over from the Cottage and establish her in her old room.

She was glad of the active physical work to keep her mind off Mardocks. She had felt it even more than she had expected, and in the end she had manoeuvred so as not say good-bye to the children.

Judge Lyle placed her on probation for one year.

CONSTIPATION BRINGS MANY ILLS

Did you know that constipation often brings despondency? Poisons spread through the system. You lack pep. Headaches become frequent. No wonder you have the "blues."

Yet constipation can be overcome by having sufficient roughage in your diet. A pleasant way to obtain this roughage is through eating Kellogg's ALL-BRAN.

You will enjoy this delicious cereal. And how much better for you than taking habit-forming laxatives.

Two tablespoonfuls of ALL-BRAN will relieve and prevent both temporary and recurring constipation.

ALL-BRAN also contains iron to build up the blood. At all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

mistress and herself.

A high arm-chair with a carved back stood invitingly near the table where Mary was at work.

"You'll get flour on you there. I shan't be able to help it. I'm not a clean worker really. Deb says I'm messy."

"I'll like the flour if you put it there," she assured her, and Mary laughed again. Something sang in her heart.

"Well, and how's things?" she asked, as she lifted a handful of dough and began to roll it on the board. "If you come in like this you mustn't expect to be treated with proper ceremony. It's impossible, don't you see?"

"I do see, thank Heaven! Well, things are pretty desperate, so desperate that I'm thinking of folding my tent like the Arab and silently stealing away one of these nights."

"That isn't done, if you like," said Mary soberly. "Just because things are as they are, you can't! You're needed desperately. I'm sure you realize that."

"I do, but as I keep saying to Disney, I don't think I'm the man for the job."

Mary rolled and then cut her scones with a sharp knife and invited him to regard its conveyance to the kitchen stove.

"Know what a girdle is?" she asked. "No! But I'm open to be taught."

"Come and see it. That came from Scotland, like a lot of other good things and people. They'll abuse the Scotch to you sooner or later. Take it from me, they've got points. They know all that's worth knowing about good food, anyway. If I were in a little Highland shelling, such as I'm hoping to have some day of my very own, this would hang on what Granny calls a swee. Know what a swee is?"

"Heathen darkness," murmured Manning in his most delighted voice. "It's a sort of pulley with a hook, and you hang the girdle on it and move it to order and necessity. This is a makeshift, but you'll see what a good thing can come off it."

She took a snow-white rag, wiped the browning flour off the girdle, and laid the scone on the hot plate. "Now we can breathe for three or four minutes, Major Manning; come and sit down again. What's the trouble at Mardocks. I think I know."

"Will you tell me?" "No, you'll tell me."

It would take a day," he said with a queer twist of his mouth that was but half a smile. "You see, it's an earthquake that's wanted there, something to shake the foundations and topple over the whole fabric. It's wrong and rotten, from the very underpings up."

Mary clasped her hands. "Oh, do make the earthquake! Don't you see it's what you've come through the war for, to shake up England, and help build the new world. And before there can be a new world the underpings you are speaking about must be taken out."

"But they'll have to be replaced by something else—that is the trouble." Mary walked to the fire-place, deftly turned the scones, and came back with her head a little on one side like a thoughtful bird. She had forgotten all about the wonder of what had happened, all her concern was that somebody was alive to the

Would Turn Dole Over To Industry

THE GERMAN FINANCE MINISTER MAKES DARING PROPOSAL FOR UNEMPLOYMENT.

STUTTGART, Germany, Jan. 12.—Hermann Dietrich, German Finance Minister, in an address on the German economic situation here today, advanced the startling proposal that Germany's vast unemployment dole be put to work by pouring it into the pockets of idle workers.

Denouncing the huge waste of unemployment, he said: "Paying out to the millions of unemployed more than 3,000,000,000 marks (about $750,000,000) annually without receiving anything in return is so exorbitant that, despite all theoretical considerations, we must dare to find a new way out."

His suggestion for a "new way out" was to pay this vast sum to industry instead of to the idle. He explained that he did not think of it as a subsidy but as a means of enabling industry to put 4,000,000 jobless to work. The money now paid out in doles would partly pay the wages of extra workers taken on by industry otherwise unable to absorb them.

The effect naturally would be not only to give the jobless work, which most of them would rather have than the idleness dole, but would speed the movement toward lower prices and bigger exports by lowering the production costs of industry.

There may be some drawback to this plan, Herr Dietrich admitted, but "when four million citizens are in danger of being driven to despair, qualms and scruples are nothing and positive measures are everything."

The greater danger, however, in fact the chief danger of the present situation, he said, is the crushing of independent business enterprise, on the inventiveness and daring of which the entire capitalistic system depends.

"Economic systems of earlier times have gone under because they were not equal to the problems to which they were applied," he declared, reminding his audience that although reparations payments are widely blamed for all of Germany's fiscal ills, that burden "must not stop us from taking positive action."

Reparations, he said, not only are "draining the economic blood of the nation, but also are a contributory cause of unemployment." They are also upsetting the economic balance of the whole world he declared, and hitting the creditor nations as well as Germany.

"When, if ever, Germany will bring up the reparations problem for consideration," said he, "has not been decided. But in any case we are not considering violation of any treaties"
