

TORTURED BY KIDNEY TROUBLE

Quickly Relieved By Short Treatment With "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

MADAM LALONDE

I am writing to tell you that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives". This fruit medicine relieved me when I had given up all hope of recovering my health.

I suffered terribly from Kidney Trouble, Dyspepsia and Weakness. I had these troubles for years and all the medicine I took did not do me any good.

I read about "Fruit-a-tives" and I tried them. After I had taken a few boxes, I was entirely relieved of the Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia, and had gained in strength.

I hope those who suffer with Kidney Trouble, Dyspepsia and Weakness will take "Fruit-a-tives" to recover their health.

"Sanfter the tortures of the damned" from bleeding Piles

3 Canterbury Street, July 15th, 1921
My Dear Jo.—The first application of your "JO-BEL" SALVE at once effected a cure of a bad case of bleeding piles. There were times when I suffered the tortures of the damned, and an evacuation of the bowels gave excruciating pain. You can use me as a reference.

THE ETERNAL PASSION Chapter 70

There was one way of making Paul want something very badly indeed that was to refuse it to him. In after life Patty knew this, and perhaps, just once in awhile, she made use of the knowledge.

It may be the commonest masculine characteristic—but it is stronger in some men than others. In Paul's case it was especially strong for Paul had had everything during his life; therefore he always expected to have everything. It is the point of view of those who are thoroughly spoiled.

So when something was denied him, of course that one thing was what he wanted more than anything else in the world. Patty's first refusal to go driving with him after office hours, because of the jealousy of her sister, had annoyed and then worried him. He wanted her to go—and when there were days and days that she would not go, he wanted her desperately.

He learned how much he missed her, because that he had taken her or granted, as part of his day's pleasant happenings.

Now she was refusing to see him at all! He knew how much he would miss her from the afternoons when he moped around and finally got a position, partly to quiet his conscience, partly to fill up time.

So he turned and faced Patty in the car, and said, "Oh, yes, you must!" in positive tones when she announced again that she should not see him.

He would have been instantly hounded any girl, had she tried this on him experimentally. It was rather obvious—leading a chap on until he was interested, then dropping him so he could know what he was missing, and so making him commit himself as being in love.

But Patty was genuine. She knew that. She never had tried to deceive or to coquet—now, Miriam Nestor MacKeen would have provided her with a Paul in some very subtle and clever fashion. And Paul, used to these undercurrents, would have seen through it.

But he knew Patty was real. He knew there was not a bit of coquetry in her; he saw the agony in her blue eyes as she looked at him, saw the strained lines of her face, though the road was dark and the only light came from the tiny lamp over the speedometer.

"I simply can't get along without you," he repeated. And he put a hand on her shoulder. "You've made me want to be something but an idler and a waster in the world. I never knew what life it was to end a day feeling I had done something until I found a job and worked. You made me do that."

He was wearing big driving gloves that were leather on the inside of the palm, and rough fur over the backs of the fingers and the hand. Moved by an irresistible impulse, Patty turned her head and put her cheek against the rough, furry back of the glove. In response, she felt the weight of his hand more heavily on her shoulder. And a feeling so happy that it hurt ran through her.

"I never knew girls did anything but pay $500 for a gown, to dance in all night. I thought they slept all day and had tea and went to matinees and just went about like butterflies, doing nothing but being pretty, except working girls I saw on the streets or in cars, and they were always so homely I never thought much about them. I hate ugly people and ugly things—Mother's taught me that all my life. Anyway, I never thought much about anything until I began running around with you. I can't get along without you!"

Paul's serious mood changed in a flash. He had a laugh that was a sudden joyous shout—only a small and not very loud shout. It was more like first an exclamation of pure joy. He laughed this way now, and let the girl go, only to put his arms around her and pull her roughly so she was close against him. A bundle of overcoats, fur rugs, a hat and veil that were undoubtedly badly mused, and somewhere, a face that was warm and wet lips that he could kiss.

"Well!" he exclaimed after a moment. "Then what are we arguing about?"

There was silence. Patty tried to pull away from him. But she didn't try hard, probably because she was quite tangled up in rugs and coats, and because Paul was holding her tightly and most likely because she didn't want to pull away very seriously.

"We're arguing that I've no business to be here, that we ought not to see each other," she began finally. "That your mother would be furious, for she wants you to marry Miss McKeen"—(There! She had said it in spite of her resolutions)—"That your mother thinks I'm only a stenographer, one of the people she's brought you up to dislike, that she wouldn't think

Padre Proclaims Gambling No Sin

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 10.—A Catholic is permitted to bet on a horse race, on a presidential election, or to gamble, the Rev. Father Bertrand L. Conway, C.S.P., of New York City, told an audience of Catholics and non-Catholics in his doctrinal lecture in Our Lady of the Rosary Church here recently.

Many Actresses Are Out of Work

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—An actress who is well known to Broadway took a private home a few days ago as a cook in a private home. Nothing has happened to her talent, she has not lost her looks and she did not want to forsake the stage. She was just one of nobody knows how many thousands of stage folk who are here in New York waiting for the chance that will send them back to the footlights or before the camera again.

Scores of girls and women who have known regular employment in the theatre in the fullest degree that stage work ever is regular are to be found today behind counters of the department stores or clerking in offices. Unemployment in "the profession" has never been so acute.

Aid for Those Out of Work.

Because of these conditions three women who have been connected with the stage have organized a Theatrical Woman's Exchange, through which they plan to provide aid in every way possible for women whose normal employment is in the "legitimate," vaudeville or movies, but who lack work now.

The organizers are Miss Hilda Spong, Miss Margaret Allen and Miss Anita Clarendon, a niece of Miss Ida Vorne.

It is typical of the plight in which many women of the stage now find themselves that an actress who had been employed for two years, and recently got a part in a Broadway play at $150 a week, as soon as she heard that the exchange was to be opened asked that her name be put down for all the mending that could be given her, she intends to work at it in her dressing room, she said, and whenever she has any other free time. Her entire salary is necessary to pay off her debts.

A restaurant to be known as the "Stage Door Inn," will be operated in connection with the exchange.

Miss McPhail, M. P., Enrols At Varsity

TORONTO, Feb. 10.—Miss Agnes McPhail, Canada's first woman member of the Dominion Parliament, was among the two hundred students enrolled yesterday for the opening day of the short winter course for farmers at the University of Toronto. The President, Sir Robert Falconer, Premier Drury and Mr. J. J. Morrison, Secretary of the United Farmers of Ontario, officiated at the opening ceremony at Convocation Hall, Sir Robert Falconer giving an address of welcome to the new class. There is ever present of this year's class being even more successful than last year's, which had a total membership of 275 men and women. The names on the list represented the greater part of Ontario, from as far north as Cobalt; while Nanitoulin Island has sent its quota.

In the course, which contains a variety of interesting material, a class will be conducted in public speaking, which the students find particularly attractive, especially Miss McPhail, who although already an orator of some prominence wishes to excel in the art when Parliament opens in Ottawa. The course will be marked by a number of social functions and trips about the city.

Among the speakers yesterday were Sir Robert Falconer, who explained that the course is part of the University's extension policy to make the University recognized as a public centre of training and culture as well as merely an academic institution; Premier Drury.

Wisconsin and its social atmosphere much better, that Paul stopped her with a kiss. And Patty could not pull away. She was so much in love that she could only stay there, near him, with her heart singing.

KEEPING HEROISM IN CHECK

Five-year-old Harry was almost sure that his mother would give him a spanking for it now, for the ice, had long ago disappeared, so he said to his mother, "Did you know that my brother Jim is a hero?"

"How's that?" asked his mother. Jim, who is seven, spoke up: "Oh, it was nothing much, mother, and his chest swelled with pride. We ran off and went skating one day last winter. Harry he gets out on some thin ice and is afraid to move, for he was sure that the ice was going to break. I just skated out to him, picks him up in my arms and skates to the bank with him."
