Wondering how to cook the asparagus stalks tender without overcooking the delicate tops? Use a double boiler to cook the asparagus. The washed, trimmed stalks together loosely in a bunch and stand them in boiling water in bottom part of double boiler. Cook stalks until they are tender. Test by piercing them with fork. Then invert the top of the double boiler over the tips and let the steam cook the tips while the boiling water cooks the stalks.

NASTY GUESTS

Little Mrs. Emma Talbot of Oregon, retiring after 47 years as a floor woman in a hotel says that women have degenerated amazingly during the last half-century. They shine shoes on towels and carry off half the hotel equipment complained the 77-year-old woman, "and every year they are getting dirtier." So the four-foot 4 1/2 inch tall woman, who figures she's made 300,000 beds, decided never to make another bed for profit. But "Little Emma," as hotel residents call her, wasn't ready to quit working at only 77.

WHIPPOORWILL

The whippoorwill has a big mouth. In theory this mouth is peculiarly adapted to catching insects, for the bird does its insect hunting at night and on the wing, says the New York Times. It has to catch lots of insects in a hurry, for it doesn't spend much time hunting. Most of its time is spent making noise with that big mouth. The whippoorwill does not sing. If you are charitable about such matters you may call its noise a call, but it is about on a musical par with the squeaks of an un-greased wagon wheel. Not as piercing, perhaps, but more persistent.

Automobile Battery

Be sure always to add water to the automobile battery at regular intervals, and keep its level about 1/2-inch above the tops of the plates. Distilled water should be used when possible, but if not, then it is all right to use natural water. A good substitute for distilled water is artificial ice melted in a porcelain container.

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

World's Meanest Wife

Woman Wants Husband Back Home

After Existence of Misery

DEAR MISS DIX: I am a woman in my late thirties, with four children, two still in school and two out of school, supporting themselves. A year ago my husband left home and has since refused to live with me, although he has continued supporting us and is friendly to the children. He says he will never live with me again and wants a divorce, but I have refused, feeling that he would still give in to me, as he always has before, but this time crying doesn't seem to change him.

Our quarrels were mostly about money. He wanted me to economize, claiming that I could help him by learning how to sew, saving on groceries, and even doing some of the housework. He said that he couldn't afford the money to spend, but this was just an excuse, for when I cried long enough he always managed to get the money. Don't you think having four children gives a woman a right to take things easy? And isn't saving money a man's worry? He always complained because I accused him in front of the children of associating with other women. He knew I didn't believe it and only said it to get him to do the things I wanted him to do.

CHILDREN FAVOR HIM

I have given 20 of the best years of my life to him and now he thinks he can simply walk out on me. I have tried to make the children understand how mean he is to do so, but they side with him and insist that I should give him a divorce. Please give me your advice and tell me how I can make him come back.

HEART-BROKEN WIFE

ANSWER: You say you have given 20 of the best years of your life to your husband. As you spent them in torturing him, you must have had a pleasant time of it. But how about your poor victim who had to spend 20 years enduring your abuse and your selfishness and your insults before he summoned up enough courage to make a break away from you?

For downright meanness and littleness and lack of all compassion, I have never read any letter that I thought was so cruel as yours, and the marvel of it is, that you don't seem to realize what you have done. That you have put a good man through 20 years of misery and ruined his life and yet you are not only not ashamed of it and sorry for it, but you want him to come back and let you give another turn to the screw!

You ask how you can get him back. You can't. For you must know that you have killed all of his affection and respect for you, and that if he has a grain of intelligence left in him he will never put himself in your power again.

DEAR MISS DIX: I have a stepdaughter of 14 of whom I am very fond, and she has always been devoted to me until recently when she has begun to resent all authority. I try to handle her very tactfully and to make suggestions rather than commands. The main trouble is that she is very untidy about herself and her room and I get tired of picking up after her. What can I do?

STEPMOTHER

ANSWER: All girls of that age are rebels. They are just beginning to feel that they are grown-up and they resent all authority. And they are all lazy. Try leaving her clothes where she drops them and see if she will pick them up when she finds she hasn't anything clean to wear.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I was in the Navy for six years and have just returned home. My trouble is that I am in love with a nice girl, but I am so bashful that I can't even talk to her without blundering. The worst part of it is that to bolster up my courage I have begun drinking, which I never did before. What would you advise me to do to get over being tongue-tied when I am in company? JIM.

ANSWER: Well, Jim I certainly wouldn't recommend liquor as a cure, for while it may make your tongue work easier, it doesn't improve the output. No worth-while girl is going to want to listen to the silly babbling of a half-drunk man, so cut out the whiskey. All they want is for a chap to tell them in plain words how pretty they are, and how much they love them, and what about getting married. And if you can't say it, just write it. If the girl wants you, she will say "yes."

EARN EXTRA MONEY THIS EASY AND PLEASANT WAY

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

Our Sabbath at Alderley, peaceful and lovely, ended with a pleasant stroll across ours, and neighboring farm-lands. Early in the evening, before the cows had been brought from the pasture we—James and I—set out to visit the to the East. These are the same two, who have dwelt together in peaceful and loving accord—like a pair of cooling turtle doves—for many years. All of their family of ten sons and daughters have gone out from the home acres to other occupations, except one sturdy lad of a fellow of a dozen years brown now from sun and winds and very alert. His constant companion in holiday time is a flop-eared black and white spaniel much esteemed for his loyalty and sagacity and a fine play-fellow. Crossing the fence, up the rise from our buildings (with a creaking and complaining of joints) we came to the M's across their fields, skirting woodlands where birds skirring woodlands where birds skirring down to a precious sylvan retreat where a rustic bridge crosses a brook. Only a striking happy and "blushing" almost unseen. A brook beside which would be tempted to feel again, the delight of wading in the clear cool stream.

Angling a meadow then, carpeted with the low sweet-smelling white clover, we came down a decline to a charming spot where echoes linger and a bridge spans the head of the river, which curves prettily here and is lost presently around a bend. Trees line the banks and I could catch faintly the ghosts of many a happy lad and lass, who had fished for trout here or slipped down instead to swim or waded in warm Summer days. The tide had ebbed to leave a small channel, at the time of our passing and small sea-birds, outstretched themselves along the flats. Spruces and maples and the lofty pine were traced on the sunlit sky and a red trail beneath now altogether shadowy, wound invitingly up the opposite slope. I instinctively reached for James' hand in this exquisite lover's lane and together we breathed the incline.

We came to the M's buildings, which are charmingly situated near the bank of the river, and a commanding excellent view of an extent of country and highway, in time to see walking; the pet of a mare to be heated at the trough by the well-worn harness, the lovely creak of the windlass—and the white flock of poultry follow their mistress, and the great hall, a summons to its worshippers. The sound hung suspended on the air, away in the distance. Here on this day, where I found the glory of a farm, where I found a feeling akin to worship, in the sunlight along new meadows, scattered and busy with a little timothy now a-bloom over a different trail we returned to the quiet folk and hostess are busy to take time from their farming to enjoy many other interesting business and always time to observe the children's bright days by a trip to favorite stream, to the way of yesterday in Summer and the city had much too that intrigued. By winter there were seasonal spots to enjoy, and we were to see the "come a piece" with James and me. Walking with us surely in the peace of evening, and the stars look down and we lingered to say our good-nights. Cars like great fire flies skinned the highway, and the night was lit with a little timothy now a-bloom over a different trail we returned to the quiet folk and hostess are busy to take time from their farming to enjoy many other interesting business and always time to observe the children's bright days by a trip to favorite stream, to the way of yesterday in Summer and the city had much too that intrigued. By winter there were seasonal spots to enjoy, and we were to see the "come a piece" with James and me. Walking with us surely in the peace of evening, and the stars look down and we lingered to say our good-nights. Cars like great fire flies skinned the highway, and the night was lit with a little timothy now a-bloom over a different trail we returned to the quiet folk and hostess are busy to take time from their farming to enjoy many other interesting business and always time to observe the children's bright days by a trip to favorite stream, to the way of yesterday in Summer and the city had much too that intrigued.
