THE CHARLOTTETOWN GUARDIAN

TUESDAY MORNING MAY 15, 1906.

MR. AYLESWORTH'S CASE.

Before his accession to the Cabinet and the position of Postmaster General, Mr. Aylesworth was a lawyer in lucrative practice. When he became a Minister and Member of the Commons the general public supposed for what seemed to be valid reasons, that he would content himself with his official salary of $7,000 with his sessional indemnity of $2,500 and devote his great talents exclusively to the service of his country. Hon. Mr. Aylesworth has not done this. He has gone on practicing in the courts, and has been repeatedly absent from his Department, absent from Cabinet meetings and absent from the sittings of Parliament while engaged in private practice in the courts.

It is admitted that Mr. Aylesworth could earn and receive in his law practice alone an income considerably in excess of the $9,500 of salary and indemnity which he receives as Postmaster General and Member of the House of Commons. But the same is true of many members of the bar who have been appointed to the Bench, and in not a few cases where an appointment as Judge has been offered to a lawyer of large practice the appointment has been declined for this reason, and because a Judge is obligated to devote his time and efforts to his judicial duty and not to accept other employment.

Moreover it is the rule in the civil service generally that clerks and officials shall devote their time to the public service and shall not engage in private business. This rule covers both inside and outside service, the railway service and the post office, for instance, an exception being made in the case of country postmasters whose salary is too insignificant to enable them to live without attending to other business. It is contended with apparent good reason, that the head of a department should for the sake of good discipline himself keep to the rules which he enforces upon his subordinates and that it is contrary to sound public policy for a public servant receiving a good salary, to engage at will in a private calling and himself decide what portion of his time and talents he shall give to private work and what to the public service.

A further objection has been made to Mr Aylesworth practising in the courts because he is a member of the Government which appoints and promotes Judges. Other lawyers and the litigants employing them feel that they are not quite on an equality before the courts in which the opposing counsel by reason of his official position might exercise undue influence upon the court. In any case it is not felt to be fair that a person having a large official salary from the Government should thus compete with those who are wholly dependent upon private business for the means of living.

Of course a defence is made, but not on the grounds of sound policy, or right or justice. The defence or excuse is that the like of what Mr. Aylesworth is doing has been done before, in Canada and elsewhere, under somewhat similar circumstances. There can be no doubt however, as to the attitude of the general public in regard to this matter. It is wholly opposed to the position taken and defended by Mr. Aylesworth. The Government must suffer in the public estimation if the practice is allowed to continue. We are paying Mr. Borden a salary because it is contended that he must abandon his law practice in order to rightly discharge the duties of Leader of the Opposition. Mr. Aylesworth, with larger remuneration than was ever before paid to a Postmaster General in Canada, is continuing his private practice of the bar. These cases are not easily reconcileable.

ROYALTIES ARE NOT IDLE.

Many persons are inclined to regard our royal personages as submitting to a life of pleasure and do-nothingness. Indolence, however has no place in their lives. The educational exactions for them go far beyond the ordinary individual. Prince Arthur at Laval University, Quebec, the other day charmed everybody by the fluency and purity of his French; at Berlin he would doubtless have equally delighted the Germans in their own tongue. To do and say the right thing—and he, at his tender years, seems an expert in that role—has certainly demanded careful and persistent preparation even in a talented subject. The King is known to be the busiest man in his realms. Even the young Alphonse of Spain speaks nine languages fluently. The educational demands are therefore fewer and simpler with democratic America than anywhere, whilst many Americans think that they have the greatest burden to bear in this way. It all comes back to this: well directed labor on any proper work will make itself felt. There is no royal road to learning; effort masters everything, and the crowning of effort with success is the best joy the world affords. Indolence is not only a vice in princes; it is the meanest of vices in the people.

JAMES PATON & CO.

It now appears that Father Gapon was really hanged for his treachery to the cause of Russian liberty.

The assassination of the Russian Vice Admiral Kuzwich in the streets of St. Petersburg shows that the revolutionary element is still active.

The British people are pleased with Canada's invitation to the King and Queen to visit this country and the prospects of the visit being brought about are growing brighter.

The Sultan of Turkey has yielded to the British demand to evacuate the Egyptian territory he had occupied in the Sinai peninsula. As usual, he yielded only after a demonstration of force was made, but that only adds to his humiliation. The seized Egytian town of Tabah will be restored and an Anglo-Turkish commission will delimit the disputed boundary.

CANADA'S OLDEST RAILWAY

Shows Its Appreciation Of Madame Albani.

The Grand Trunk Railway company being the oldest institution of the kind in Canada, felt that it would be no more than fitting that they should be among the first to evidence their appreciation of what Madame Albani had done for Canada. As a consequence the Diva was somewhat surprised when arriving in Canada to find an invitation extended from this organization, that she become their guest during the time the itinery enabled her to use their system. Thus the great singer was given the use of the Company's finest private car, and free transportation for herself and entire party. The company have placed every possible convenience at the disposal of Madame Albani, and she of course greatly appreciates the courtesy which prompted such an act on the part of the company. Albani will be heard here June 4th. Subscribe now. The subscriptionlist is now open at Jamieson's Drugstore.
