Rescued for the Roll Call

YESTERDAY'S ugly little cold was "rubbed away" last night. She's safe from the sharp misery of grip or bronchitis that so often starts with "just a cold." Now she won't miss school after all.

Thanks to this Modern Vaporizing Ointment

She escaped, too, the "dosage" that might have upset her digestion. And all because, last night at bedtime, Mother rubbed her throat and chest with Vicks. Like a gentle but effective poultice, this modern vaporizing salve began to "draw out" all the tightness and pain. At the same time, warmed by her body, it gave off healing vapors that she breathed in to clear her stuffed-up nose and throat. She quickly fell asleep, but Vicks' double action went on for hours and, by morning, the worst of her cold was over. Mother checks her own colds the same quick way. TELLS STORY for the ship sank with no rescue vessels within many miles. Only One Message Veschere's said that he was on duty from 8 to 12 day and night and that from the time the ship left New York until it sank he only sent one message other than personal ones from passengers and that was a weather report to Washington. "But there was some other sort of message?" Tuttle asked. "I'm not sure."

"Didn't you tell me downstairs there was one reading 'We may need aid!'"
"Yes, I forgot."
"Who told you to forget?"
"No one."
"Who sent that message?"
"I don't know."

Q. How long should a friendly call last?
A. From one to one and a half hours.
Q. Is it proper to send out printed cards announcing one's engagement?
A. No.
Q. In what form are invitations to luncheon usually issued?
A. By short, personal notes from the hostess.

"When was it sent?"
"I don't know."
"Was it before you came on duty Sunday night at eight o'clock?"
"Maybe."
The witness under further questioning said he recalled that the message was addressed to the Lampport and Holt Line but no repetition or rephrasing of questions could bring any answer regarding the time the message was sent, who ordered it sent, whether there were any others of a similar nature or other details. Tuttle made especial efforts to establish the time of the message.

"Isn't it a fact," the Federal Attorney pounded away at the dark youth with the expressionless face, "that when you went on duty at eight o'clock Sunday night you looked through the file of messages sent since you last went off duty and saw that message?"
"I don't know," Veschere replied. "I think I first heard of it Monday."
"But you said a minute ago it might have been Sunday."
Veschere made no response and Tuttle directed his exasperation in a gesture directed at the commissioner. Concerning the time the SOS was sent Monday morning Veschere was almost equally vague.
"It was about 10," he said.
"Was there a clock in the wireless room?"
"Yes, with Greenwich meridian time."
"And you didn't note down the time when the SOS was sent?"
"There wasn't any clock."
"But you just said . . . . ."
"Oh, that showed Greenwich meridian time. I took no notice of that."
"Do you expect, me to believe that?" Tuttle snapped.
"What time was it?"
"I can't be definite," Veschere said firmly.

"Did you take the stand today with the intention of being definite about nothing at all?" Tuttle asked. "Was that the program?"
"No."
Veschere then told of leaving the radio cabin with the chief operator, who was drowned, and James MacDonald, another assistant wireless man, and sliding down the tilted deck of the ship into a lifeboat. This, he said, he did, there was no drinking water, and no flares.

"The only time during his long questioning that the youth smiled was when Tuttle at length said: "You may be excused now—temporarily."
Makes Denial
While Tuttle's hearing was in progress in the Federal building, Captain Frederick Sorenson, a ship's master who was a passenger on the Vestris, was telling, at a steamship inspection service hearing in the Customs building, a story that differed sharply from that he was reported in the newspapers as telling when he landed Wednesday.

Captain Sorenson denied today that he had said on arriving here that the life-boats were rotten and improperly equipped, or that the crew had been cowardly before the vessel sank.
NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—A fourth inquiry into the wreck of the Vestris, the blackest marine disaster since the Lusitania went down, will be instituted without delay in England and another by Congress is forecast soon.

Sharks and littered wreckage are now the only indication by that limitless expanse of water down the coast that a crowded liner was conquered by the sea. The search for survivors has been abandoned.
The name of the Vestris' young radio operator Michael J. O'Loughlin, will be inscribed on the monument in Battery Park erected to the memory of wireless men as one who kept the unwritten law of the sea by sticking to his ship until the end.

His will be the fifteenth name on the roll of honor. One of the first is Jack Phillips, the radio operator of the Titanic.
The cost to insurance companies by the sinking of the Vestris and the loss of its cargo might reach $4,000,000, it was estimated by insurance brokers today. This would be exclusive of claims for damages by survivors or by relatives of those lost in the disaster. No estimate of these claims could be obtained.
LONDON, November 17. — The British Board of Trade has ordered an investigation into all the phases of the sinking of the Lampport and Holt steamer Vestris off the Vir-

Final Witness
The final witness was Arthur S. Costigan of the Radio Marine Corporation, connected with the R. C. A. He said that, at Tuttle's request, he had been searching for radio messages from and to the Vestris and that his search was not yet completed.
The first radiogram put in evidence and read to the court was from Captain Carey to the Lampport and Holt Line. The time received stamped on it, was 11 a. m., Monday, November 12. It read as follows:
"Have to from noon yesterday. During night developed 32-degree list. Starboard decks under water. Ship lying on beam ends. Impossible to proceed anywhere. Sea moderately rough."
(Signed) "Carey."
Tuttle here remarked on testimony of previous witnesses that they did not know of the engines
