Advice to the Prospective Bridegroom

Dorothy Dix Tells How to Assure a Happy Marriage

"Take Your Time and Look About You Before You Enter Into a Life Contract to Put Up With Temper and Temperament and Pay Bills of Any Woman," is Dorothy Dix's Advice to Young Men

A young man asks me to give him some advice appertaining to and concerning marriage.

Well, son, my first bit of counsel is not to be in a hurry about marrying. Take your time and look about you before you enter into a life contract to put up with the temper and temperament and pay the bills of any woman.

Don't take a girl out of a good home, where she has kind and loving parents and brothers and sisters and friends for company, and where she leads an interesting and amusing life, and drop her down into a bungalow or kitchenette apartment and leave her to fend for herself.

Don't marry until you have the price. A family is an expensive luxury in these days of the high cost of living and you want to be very sure that you can afford the upkeep before you set one up.

Don't marry a girl for one thing and expect her to be the exact opposite as soon as you get her home. There is no magic in the marriage ceremony that changes the character of a woman and turns a morose into a blue stocking or a spender into a saver or a petter into a prude.

Remember that kittens grow up into cats, and flappers cease to flap, and that the cute little ways that are so entrancing in the days of courtship when you only see a little of them will get on your nerves if you have to live with them day in and day out.

Don't forget that you pick out your wife yourself. She represents your taste and judgment in women, and if you make a mistake, blame your own lack of intelligence, not her.

If he has intelligence enough to be let out without a keeper, he should know that the thin-faced, nervous, neurotic girl is going to make a nagger; that the bossy girl is going to keep her husband out of his life, and that the daily hint from Paris will keep the man who has to pay her bills with his nose to the grindstone.

Don't marry out of your class. The happiest marriages are those in which the husband and wife are near the same age and have been brought up in the same school of thought in religion and politics and raised on the same kind of pie.

Don't cut out all the love-making as soon as you are married. Matrimony does not cause a woman to shed her sweet tooth, even if she does out her wisdom teeth on her wedding ring.

Show your wife appreciation. Compliment her upon her thrift when she saves your money. Give her the glad hand for the way she manages your home.

Don't marry unless you are willing to give your wife as liberal an allowance as you can possibly afford for her own personal use. Probably before marriage she got a fat salary for her labor.

Finally, don't neglect the little courtesies, the little attentions, the little amenities of life, just because you are married. Treat your wife as if she were a lady, even if she married to you.

A Morning Smile,

"Do you play bridge?" "No," confessed Miss Cayenne, "I merely sit in sometimes and provide a more expert partner with an excuse for losing."

Unknown

In England this scandalous story has lately spread: "At the War Office they know who the Unknown Soldier is. They've known it all along."

If "they" know, the Rev. G. Kendall knows. He was Senior Chaplain of His Majesty's 63rd naval division during the War. He brought Britain's officially nameless hero home.

To hard-boiled, suspicious newshawks, the clergyman explained. He said that near Ypres, Arras, Cambrai on the Marne and "in two other salients" a total of six shell-ton and unrecognizable bodies of British soldiers were discovered by an impartial commission of which he was a member.

To make cheating absolutely impossible, all concerned then retired to a distance. Lastly "a British officer of very high rank" was blindfolded, led into the hut, which he had not previously entered.
