Improvement Is Shown In Oyster Industry

Encouraging Reports From S'side Trade Board Committee.

A "reasonable increase" in the production of oysters last year, with many companies and individuals spending large sums in the cleaning of areas and placing of cones to which the spot of the oyster adheres, was reported at Thursday's annual meeting of the Summerside Board of Trade by Mr. T. M. Linklater, M. L. A., chairman of the fisheries committee.

The making of crates in which the embryo oyster is placed to attain a certain size before being planted on the natural bed as well as other necessary labor and connection with this business has given a great deal of work to fishermen and others who would otherwise have been idle, the report stated. The number of crates used in 1937 that number was increased to 55,600 and in 1938 to 90,000. Most of the work was done in the Malapque area.

From Prince alone in 1937 the shipment was 3,180 barrels; in 1938, 4,511 barrels were shipped, Mr. Linklater stated.

—Air Service — A comprehensive report was submitted at the meeting by Mr. A. Brennan, chairman of the air service committee.

The two-way radio service started last year has been in use and is proving a great aid in ease and safety.

A new road connecting Pope Road with Greens Lane, in lieu of the portion of Greens Lane closed by the extension of the East and West runway, was opened and graded and has proved a convenient and satisfactory route to the travelling public. When extended along the southern boundary of the Airport to connect with Northumberland street it will be the shortest route from St. Eleanors into the residential part of Summerside.

An appropriation to carry out a preliminary grading program was procured from the Department of Transport, last season, but because of a difference of opinion caused by change in the personnel of the Department Inspection staff, this work was not carried out, and the whole amount therefore not expended. A small amount of grading was done, however, that will be of some assistance when the complete program is proceeded with.

The following synopsis of the years service was given:—Number of planes landings, Summerside Airport 622. Cash income to Summerside 22,000. Pounds of mail out of Summerside 31,113. Pounds of mail in Summerside 42,046. Number of mail out of Summerside 2,000. Passengers Carried 1,224. Pounds express carried 6,278. Miles flown 84,349. Hours flown 850. Flights 1,564.

Now that Max Schmeling is on his way to these shores, the possibility looms Der Schluger will fight Tony Galento in an "elimination" match before the doubtful promise of meeting Joe Louis.

Rest assured something will be done about keeping Louis from joining the idle rich. Four minutes, 33 seconds of action in two scheduled 15-round fights. The winner of the first fight will receive $100,000. Passengers Carried 1,224. Pounds express carried 6,278. Miles flown 84,349. Hours flown 850. Flights 1,564.

The report heretofore is that Washington will be the eighth team in the National Hockey League next year instead of Cleveland. A week before the North American Championships, which will be held for three days starting Feb. 2, Canada's best players will compete with the Canadians will compete.

The strongest challenge to a Canadian championship will be from the ladies' singles for the Devenshire Cup. Eight stars from Toronto, Ottawa and Windsor will compete with Toronto's Eleanor McEwen, 1936 and 1938 champion.

Favored to retain the men's singles title will be Montgomery (Bud) Wilson of Toronto, who has won eight times since 1929.

—OTTAWA, Jan. 26—(CP)—Investigations set in motion by the Health Department following reports that anthrax infected sheep imported into Canada have been partially completed. Pensions Minister Powell told the House of Commons today.

A French mission now in the United States is understood to contemplate the purchase of 250 of more other American aircraft to augment the output of French factories, which are reported to have trailed both Germany's and Italy's in recent months.

—NEW YORK, Jan. 27—(AP)—The French Government is contemplating the purchase of 600 United States-made warplanes as an emergency measure in the face of low production at home.

One hundred Curtiss pursuit planes are in the process of delivery. An equal number of the same type were ordered last week, and a third order is being studied by the French Air Ministry.

In addition, 300 ultra-fast American two-engine light bombers, capable of being used for combat after they have dropped their bomb loads, probably will be purchased by the French.

One plane of that type under consideration, manufactured by the Douglas Aircraft Company of Santa Monica, Calif., crashed Monday with a representative of the French Government riding as observer. It had undergone most of its acceptance tests.

It was reported that the British are 200 light bombers and 200 training planes.

The French are having an identical type with the United States Army Air Corps "P-37" except for lack of retractable landing gear which the army refused to release.

G.N.R.'s Growth Outlined By Fairweather

GASKATOON, Jan. 27—The genesis of the Canadian National Railways, as a system, was traced to the determined effort of Western Canada to break away from the railway profit incentive as being the sole criterion by which the expansion of the Prairie Provinces should be judged.

Mr. Fairweather, chief of research and development, Canadian National Railways, during an address delivered before the Saskatchewan Board of Trade.

Mr. Fairweather found that two schools of thought thus came into conflict, one favoring upon development removed from existing railway transport, the other believing that the best way of developing a nation is to afford the widest possible opportunity to the industry and enterprise of settlers and industrialists.

"This concept led to the expansion of railways in advance of the ability to render them profitable in themselves," he continued.

"This school of thought believed that the benefits from the development of the country should belong to the country and that that development should not be kept subservient to the doctrine of immediate railway profits. This policy called for more and more railway construction to tap greater and greater areas, until today we have in the Prairie Provinces a population of 2,454,000 people, producing a condition in which there are 125 people per mile of railway."

To those who consider that a desirable state of affairs and who believe that Canada would have been much wiser not to have constructed railways on such a scale, Mr. Fairweather answered that "that was a theory and he asked: 'How can we tell what course development might have taken if we had followed a restrictive policy?'"

What would Western Canada look like today if that policy had been followed?

Canada leads the world in her demands of railway transportation per capita, declared Mr. Fairweather, and this, he said, "is indicative that the country is dependent upon railway service. No other country moves a greater tonnage of commodities per capita than Canada."

With particular reference to the national system, Mr. Fairweather said: "Despite the fact that Canada stands at the top of all nations in having the lowest transportation cost per ton-mile, I am confident that the economic or all-inclusive cost of railway transport. That condition of affairs has struck me as a challenge to the transportation conditions of Canada as they are."

and declared there was no reason why the economic life of Canada should be hampered without interfering one iota with the sacredness of provincial rights.

That Body of Hours

When a small child or infant does not eat, child specialists advise that they be allowed to go without food for a time as their appetite will return and they will be glad to eat anything. However, a growing girl or boy does not eat parents are naturally concerned because lack of food at this time is a very serious matter. The loss of weight becomes very noticeable, the family physician is consulted because tuberculosis or other wasting disease is suspected.

What the family has failed to notice or suspect is that the girl or boy may have a condition known as anorexia nervosa and it is this something that has taken away their appetite for food.

In discussing eight cases of loss of appetite due to emotion — anorexia nervosa — Drs. R. F. Parkhurst and H. H. Hyland, Toronto, in a medical association outline the differences in the symptoms of patients suffering with wasting diseases and patients with anorexia nervosa.

Patients suffering from wasting diseases such as tuberculosis are usually quite ill, complain of weakness and fatigue and have other visible signs long before they reach the degree of thinness seen in patients with anorexia nervosa. In the other hand patients with anorexia nervosa are restless and active. They remain quick, alert, active, and deny ill health. Their active relatives bring them to the physician but the patients protest that they feel well.

Sometimes a gland condition may cause the lack of desire for food without any emotional disturbance (mental conflict) being present. In the treatment of anorexia nervosa, Drs. Parkhurst and Hyland state:

"It is desirable that the patient be removed to a hospital away from anxious relatives and friends. Treatment in the public ward is to be preferred because contact with other patients and diseases makes the reassurance they receive more helpful. The optimism of doctors and nurses, combined with freedom of stress of their former surroundings at home or at work, is usually a hindrance to improvement."

After a thorough examination has been made to make sure that no real or organic disturbance exists, the cause of the mental conflict is sought and can usually be removed by careful questioning and explanation.
