GAS PETRIFIES POTATO

TAFT, Cal., Dec. 15—A new problem for chemistry students was evolved here recently from the theft of the cap from W. L. Altmiller's gasoline tank. Altmiller substituted a potato for the missing cap. The tuber shrunk, dropping into the tank, and a few days later was removed, petrified into a stony mass. Chemists were trying to find out why.

Economic Conditions Show Improvement

Belgium is among the industrial countries which have been able to offer most resistance to the world-wide depression, and whose production, relatively speaking, has been reduced the least, writes Henri Turcot, Canadian Trade Commissioner at Brussels, in the forthcoming issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal. The number of unemployed is relatively small, amounting to 3.9 per cent of the total population. The country's power of resistance is explained to a large extent by the reduction in the cost of living, retail prices, expressed in terms of gold, being at their pre-war level. Belgium's monetary position is very strong. The National Bank possesses an unprecedented quantity of gold, and the covering in precious metal is higher than at any previous time, so that the belga is at a premium in the exchange market. Belgian banks are not involved to any considerable extent in any of those countries where short term credits are either frozen or compromised, and since they have resisted the temptation to work with foreign money on short term they are not exposed therefore to the sudden withdrawals of large amounts.
