The cracker later exploded and ignited the others causing burns along his hip and thigh. THOMAS W. BRADSHAW

—The sad news reached friends and relatives in Searltown on Dec. 6th of the death of Thomas (Thos.) W. Bradshaw in Halifax Hospital on Dec 5th. He was in his usual health until a month before his death but on the advice of his physician on the previous Tuesday he was taken to Halifax by chartered plane for an operation. But on his arrival his condition became serious and his five sons left to be with him and remained with him until he passed away Friday night at 10.15.

He was the well known and highly respected son of the Late Wallace J. Bradshaw, and Elizabeth Wright Bradshaw Middleton and was in his 73rd year. He had remained on the Homestead until 3 years ago when he disposed of his property there and took up residence in Searletown where he had retired with his son Malcolm ever since He was a very efficient potato inspector in the Province for a number of years. RECALLS no native children. As this school had been existence for only six or seven years, it lacked the organization our Canadian schools have built up over a period of years. The pupils read more comprehensively than ours, perhaps due to the fact that much children's reading material was found in all the homes, but they were deficient in Arithmetic. One would find them struggling with Algebra and Geometry, when they were not sure of their multiplication tables. Eleven year old children were attempting to read Shakespeare. I was asked to do what I could do to improve the status and make it a real school, not a play-house. All I had to do was to focus their efforts on the fundamentals, so that they would have the groundwork done before attempting anything more difficult.

"I am reasonably confident that now those pupils would be able to enter their proper age group in English, West Indian, or Canadian schools. I had the interesting experience of visiting several West Indian schools. The children in these schools are mostly colored. The work done was surprisingly good. Accommodation was inadequate; six or seven teachers carrying on in only two rooms, maybe two fully trained teachers and the others student teachers. The classes were generally much overcrowded. These children seemed well up to standard in Arithmetic, but rather poor in reading. This was probably due to the fact that there was very little reading material in the homes, and also that patois English was spoken there. All secondary schools in Trinidad I found quite comparable to our own. It is very regrettable that there are no universities in the West Indies.

"My first holiday, I spent in British Guiana, or Demerara, which name probably suggests it's chief export which is quite well known on P.E.I. My second, in the United Kingdom, for the most part in London. I was very pleased to get back to London and see the old historic places I had visited some ten years ago. However, one of the highlights of my sojourn in the Southland was my trip to Venezuela. There I spent one week, going each day to a different school in the Standard Oil area. They are all American children in these schools. There I found material perfection, as might be expected in the schools of that plutocratic Company.

"The schools looked like little show places. One teacher demonstrated a musical period. All the pupils, provided with home-made instruments, beat time to her playing on the piano. Drums were made of coffee tins, painted white with colored pictures on the front. There were five schools in all, with from two to three teachers in each. A supervisor, a girl, was head of them all. She ordered all equipment and visited the schools periodically, and supplied for any teacher who was ill. No teacher had more than fifteen pupils, the average was eleven. Excellent work was done. All the teachers were adept in the pedogogical art.

"The lowest salary paid was three hundred dollars a month for 12 months, one hundred and twenty-five of which was deposited in her home bank each month. The teachers got annual holidays with all travelling expenses. They were strongly recommended to take short courses during their holidays. There was a piano in every school, also all sorts of equipment for Arts and Crafts. The teachers conducted sports and games twice a year on spacious playgrounds, one and one-half acres excellently equipped. Much freedom of expression was allowed the children, both in the class room and in organizing their public concerts and sports.

Decided Contrast

"I found a decided contrast between the home training of the typical English child, and the typical American child. For example, when I arrived at Leaseholds School, the children did not speak to me until I was formally introduced by the head mistress — after that they greeted me with "Good Morning, Miss Harrington", or "Good Evening Miss Harrington", but having spent one afternoon in the Standard Oil school, and saying I would be back the next day, I met two children on the street that evening, and they greeted me with "Hi! Miss Harrington, what's cooking for tomorrow?"

"I feel that these teachers deserved the high salaries they were getting. During the nine months of school work, they had very little opportunity for social relaxation, being seventy-five miles from the nearest town, each of the plants was small, no games except tennis, no moving pictures and no bathing facilities. Their only compensation was that they were well paid and had luxurious places in which to work and live. Leaseholds plant, where I lived, was the very opposite. All sorts of games and amusements were available, including swimming, yachting, rugby, cricket, squash, ground hockey, the cinema, bridge, tennis and golf.

"The educational authorities in the South were deeply interested in hearing what I had to say about our educational system. I invariably received special invitations to attend their meetings and express my views. They were keenly aware of the advantages of exchanging ideas. Personally, I think it is an ideal way of discovering the best points in any system, and of evolving worthwhile improvements.

"Now, gentlemen, you have heard the highlights of what was my second Island home for two interesting years. Perhaps some of you will take a West Indian cruise some day, and I hope that you will enjoy, as I did, the picturesque land that I have attempted to describe to you"

Sport Echoes from Prince County

The Summerside Hockey League officals have every reason to feel happy about the first game of the season. It was played on Saturday night, a new night for hockey in Summerside, purely as an experiment, and the bumper crowd that attended proved that the experiment was a pronounced success. Then too, the two teams competing were very evenly matched, which, of course, makes for an exciting league, which in its turn should result in large crowds throughout the season. There is just one question to be settled now, and that is, will the R.C.A.F. entry be too strong or too weak for the other two teams? Their being too strong wouldn't be so bad, as fans like to see good teams in action even if they do mop up the ice with the opposition. But if they are too weak, that will certainly be a blow to the prospective success of the League. Tuesday night, (tonight if this column gets into print on schedule) will provide the answer to this question. The Legionaires, victors over the Dodgers Saturday night, will take on the airmen, and then we shall see what we shall see.

• • •

Players from the juvenile ranks more or less stole the show on the old timers Saturday night. Their lines showed by far the most coordination in attacking, and considering that they spotted most of the intermediates quite a lot of poundage, they were surprisingly effective. It goes to prove that the kids have been given a lot of careful coaching during the last two or three years, and when they reach the necessary age for full strength, and get their growth, we're going to see some hockey players of senior calibre in this vicinity. Layshie Schurman, a midget only last year, was good enough to catch the judges' nod for outstanding player on the team. Joey Schurman, still younger, was perhaps the most improved player over last year's performance on the ice. Joey was not particularly impressive with the Midget Champions last year, but he turned in a game Saturday night that made him the runner-up for honors, one judge voting him tops. MacKay, Gay, Pope and Grady were also better than good.

• • •

Somebody should take a day off and teach the kids to shoot, however. As far as sniping was concerned their ammunition was all wet. Coming over the blue-line they looked like three parts of a split atom, but the only way they could get in communication with the goalie was to carry the disk right into the net. We've read somewhere that young hockey players should be taught to shoot instantly from any angle while they are stickhandling. It doesn't give the goaler a chance to get set. Most of these youngsters have to stop and tee off to shoot, and then very often it's a blank cartridge.

We're not at all sure that the kids should be playing in this intermediate league at all, as good as they looked the other night. The bumps they're bound to get from the big fellows won't do them a bit of good, and they'd be much better hockey players in the end, we think, if they stayed with their own age divisions, and came up to intermediate ranks the easy way. But you know what kids are like. They'll grab off all the hockey they can get regardless of consequences.

And now a bouquet for Charlie Hogan and Stu Martin for the capable way they handled our first league game under rather discouraging circumstances. How they could call the off-side plays without benefit of blue-lines was a mystery to us, but call them they did, and as far as we could see pretty accurately and to everyone's satisfaction. But having no blue-lines is a terrific handicap to players, referees and fans alike. We're not panning anyone for this. The weather man seems to be the offender, but please let's get those lines on the ice without delay.

Bombings Take 23 Lives In Jerusalem

JERUSALEM, Jan. 5 —(AP)— Rescue squads dug hurriedly tonight into the bomb-strewn debris of a Jerusalem hotel and a public square in Jaffa in an attempt to reach any persons still alive and to remove the broken bodies of the dead.

The two bombings, aimed at meeting places of Arab leaders, were known to have taken 23 lives. The toll may reach 38. Police said the bombings were carried out by Jews.

A Jew was killed today and another was wounded by gunfire from orange groves near the Jaffa-Tel Aviv border. A British army sergeant was shot and killed in Haifa. The unofficial death toll in Palestine since the United Nations voted for partition Nov. 29 climbed to 565.
