"Gangsters And Cops" Is Now Popular Game For New York Urchins

Comrades Of Little Victims Of City's Gunmen Turn Tragic Happening To Source Of Recreation — Packing Cases Provided Materials For Firearms'.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3—Twenty or thirty children were playing ring-around-a-rosy and "Cowboy-and-Injun" in sweltering Harlem last month, when a spray of lead from a gangsters' car sent five of them to a hospital, one mortally wounded.

Today, while police were still hunting the baby-killers, a new game has been inaugurated among the sons and daughters of that "Little Italy" district. "Gangsters-an'-cops" it is called, and it may revolutionize the recreational diversions of tenement youth.

In front of a building still pock-marked with bullet holes that form the only placque to the memory of the slain boy half a dozen of his former playmates this afternoon were arguing over rules for their new game.

They had carved "machine guns" from packing-box boards, and wore caps pulled down over their eyes.

An Infant Desperado

On one sidewalk a small boy lay on his stomach in a baby carriage with hood up. A toy weapon poked out of a broken window.

A small express wagon, with sides built on so that it, too, resembled a sedan, stood at the opposite curb.

Down the street youthful owners of a fleet of tricycles and kiddie cars were waiting for the "firing" to begin.

But there were many problems to be settled. How about innocent bystanders? How much of a start would the gangsters be allowed before the cops began their chase?

Some of the tricycle owners, with pieces of tinfoil pinned on their chests to represent police shields, came into the conference and insisted "the cops has gotta win."

Gang War Starts

Finally positions were taken. Some one shouted: "Let's go!" The baby carriage started careening wildly down one sidewalk. The 7-year-old occupant went through furious motions with his stick of wood.

The express wagon sped down the other sidewalk. The rat-tat-tat of machine guns was simulated by the child at the "controls." With

Interested Crowd Spoils Suicide Plan

STARTLES MAN WHO WAS PREPARING TO HANG HIMSELF FROM WINDOW

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 3—With a rope tied around his neck and fastened to some wires, Dr. Moscow E. Bridges of Myrtle, Miss., paused on the edge of a second-storey window today for one last look at the world.

What he saw was most disconcerting. He had not reckoned with the curiosity of citizens aroused from their humdrum existence by the prospect of seeing a well-planned suicide.

The size of a rapidly increasing crowd so confused the doctor that he forgot to jump, and while he was shifting from one foot to the other Frank Patton, a passerby with some presence of mind, ran into the building and up the stairs to pull Bridges to safety.

Police decided Bridges was disturbing the peace and put him in jail.

B.E.S.L. OPENS CONFERENCE IN TORONTO

Address By Admiral Jellicoe, Grand President of League, Features Opening.

(Canadian Press)

TORONTO, Sept., 3—Appealing for the same unity in peace time which gave the Empire success during the Great War, Admiral of the Fleet, Earl Jellicoe today sounded the key note for the fifth biennial conference of the British Empire Service League.

With delegates in attendance from sixteen different parts of the Empire, the conference was officially opened by Col the Hon. Murray MacLaren, Minister of Pensions and National Health, who represented the Prime Minister. "The future of the League' said Col. MacLaren. "depends upon the devotion of its branches, and as the branches render service to the state, so shall the League prosper."

In his address as Grand President, Lord Jellicoe declared: "The British Empire Service League and the constituent organizations within the league are non-political, but in every part of the Empire, each organization has stood firmly against any interference by any government with the rights of those who did their duty. Ex-service men's organizations, remarked the Admiral, are sometimes incorrectly considered to be selfishly created to obtain benefits for their members from the community as a whole. "It is true" he said, "that our first duty is to protect the interests of the dependents of our fallen comrades and the welfare of all ex-service men, but that is because they have given service and sacrifice for the community at large and have suffered as the result, We do not forget that we are a responsible body in the life of the Empire." Earl Jellicoe was again elected Grand President of the British Empire Service League.

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 3—The fifth biennial conference of the British Empire Service League today passed the following resolution on motion of L. A. Robb, of
