FOOTBALL

LOOKING GOOD—EH?

No doubt football fans in the city will be pleased to learn that a start has been made in the good old game and that the interscholastic league, which has been so successful within the past three years between Queen Square and West Kent, will in all probability be carried out again this year.

Last week, on two occasions, the Queen Square football squad, who are eager of making an early start, and who are again under the capable guidance of their coach, Mr. E. J. H. Morrissey, started their workouts in preparation for one of the best years yet held in interscholastic football.

What has, and will for many years to come, make the interscholastic football league more interesting is the MacMillan Trophy, which is permanent. This trophy, which has been at stake for the past two years, was first captured by Queen Square School with a smooth and fast working aggregation. The following year, another stiff battle was put up for the honors of holding this cup and in some very close and exciting games, the West Kent team succeeded in winning these honors.

This year, with one team hard at work, and the other all ready to start their workouts, the league should be a hard fought one, and surely will produce more interest than ever before, as school football is the means of producing for Charlottetown in coming years, a team that will be representative of the city, and it would be well if citizens of Charlottetown would stick by the boys and show lots of interest in this league which is sure to be as hard fought as in former years, and is certain to show the same excellent brand of football that it had in the years gone by.

Amery Is Speaker

(Canadian Press) CALGARY, Sept. 14—While Great Britain would look upon a federation of European states with greatest cordiality, said Right Hon. L. C. M. S. Amery, former British secretary of state for the Dominions, speaking here last night, he did not for a moment believe Britain would consider entering such a federation. Mr. Amery was speaking before the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. Such a union, he said, would naturally mean an adhering of Canada to the United States of North America. What other alternative grouping is possible, he asked. The only alternative is a closer one than now exists within the Empire.

"Putty" Connors Wins Hurling Duel With Moncton Mound Ace—First Blood For Abegweits In Maritime Ball Semi-Finals.

(Canadian Press) MONCTON, N. B., Sept. 15—Pitching a brand of baseball bordered on the phenomenal, "Putty" Connors, young pitching ace of the Abegweits Club of Charlottetown, turned back the C. C.'s bid for victory, and the Prince Edward Island champions won the opening game of the semi-final series leading to the Maritime title, staged on the M. A. A. grounds here, Saturday afternoon by a 2 to 0 score.

The engagement was a real championship battle that went to full eleven innings. For ten innings, Connors, of the visiting nine, and James Kennedy, veteran right hander of the Catholic Club, staged a hurling duel that has been unparalleled here this summer, and for ten innings a medium sized crowd of fans waited for the inevitable "break" which came in the first half of the eleventh frame.

Costly Overthrow.

It was a costly wild overthrow of first base with two runners on the paths that opened the way for the two winning runs. Emile Richard, regular shortstop for the home team, made the throw that paved the way for the winning runs, but it was the strong right arm of Connors which seemed to gather strength as the game progressed, who was the real reason for the C. C. defeat, coupled with wild and reckless base running when the New Brunswick champions had the scenery all arranged for runs in the early stages of the battle.

Connors Great.

Connors held the "flying" Frenchmen to eight scattered bingles, but two of these were purely errors of judgment in the outfield, and as many more bingles went as hits that should have been fielded easily. His slants, drops and floaters were breaking like magic, and his baffling change of pace seemed to baffle the opposition, throughout. Especially in the pitches did the youthful Abegweits star seem to have lots of reserve power which he uncorked effectively at critical times. In Kennedy, Connors had a lined the "Abies" to eight bingles and had nine strikeouts as compared with a neat dozen for the Islanders' hurler, but he lacked the reserve strength of his opponent and toward the close of the battle his offerings were being met with a more persistent batting attack. Up until the eleventh his mates gave him well nigh faultless support. The C. C.'s passed up two chances to push over the winning runs earlier in the game, when in the first inning they placed a man on third and one on second with only one out, only to have their runner on third get caught between that station and the home plate, on a grounder to third, while the next man fanned. Again in the second, Burke's fly ball to right field went for three bases when McKensie misjudged it, but Burke who was the first to face the pitcher in this inning was caught in his attempt to race home on Art Cormier's grounder to McKensie.

In the fourth the Abies staged their really only serious threat to score until they advanced over the winning runs in the eleventh. At the time they filled the bases, but there were two down at the time and the third grounder was to short.

Bolger and McEachern Score. It was Bolger and McEachern who dashed over the plate with the winning tallies in the eleventh. McKensie, the first man up in this inning, ran out a slow roller down first base line but was forced at second on Bolger's grounder to third. Francis filed out to centre field, but the scenery was arranged for the fatal act. Diamond, who had relieved McKensie at centre field in the third inning, sent a grounder to shortstop, and Richard elected to throw to first instead of second, or third base, as he did so he slipped in the mud, the ball sailing high over Cummins' head.

The game advertised to start at 2:30 was postponed for an hour in the hope, the field which was left in a very muddy state following an all night rain, would dry, while an abundance of sweat was thrown in the mud which lay in puddles about the infield. The game started at 3:30, but the condition of the field made it difficult to handle the ball while the outfielders were also under a slight handicap.

On Wednesday of next week the scene of battle will shift to Charlottetown where the second game of the series will be played. Features of Saturday's battle was the hurling of Connors, the work of the infield of both teams, and the fielding of the C. C.'s outer garden defenders.

VIENNA, Sept. 14. (British United Press)—After 83 years the Grados glacier in East Tyrol has delivered up one of its dead. The body of a man, a gamekeeper named Mathershorn, was recovered after more than eight decades in an almost perfect state of preservation, especially the upper portion. His features were easily recognizable and his watch marked the very hour at which it is recorded he fell into a fatal snare.

Good eyesight is essential for success in any line of endeavor. And particularly is this true in sports. How then can one explain the success of three star athletes, Greb, Sam Langford and Chick Hafeey, who made good despite the handicap of partial blindness?—and two of them came through in the toughest racket in the world—boxing!

Harry Greb, the Pittsburgh wind-mill, not only made good in his game, but he won two titles—the middleweight and the light heavyweight. Back in 1922 Greb's right eye started to dim. Soon he was totally blind in that eye and then the left became affected. But it didn't seem to affect his work in the ring. For years he kept fighting the top flight men of his weight with one eye completely gone and the other going—and winning most of the time. After winning and losing both of his titles, and old Father Time was taking his inevitable toll, Harry underwent an operation on his eyes and died shortly after. A courageous man, Greb, and a great fighter—probably one of the greatest in the history of the prize ring.

Old Sam Langford, today a portly ex-warrior, feeling his way along life's paths, is another ring man who reached the heights in spite of dimming eyesight. Old Sam never did get to be heavyweight champion, but only because the champions of his era drew the color line. Experts rate him one of the greatest fighters of all time.

The boys never tire of retelling the story of Old Sam's quarrel with Godfrey, the Leipersville giant and pugilism's current "Black Menace." Langford, long past his prime and his sight almost completely gone, stumbled into the ring to meet Godfrey. At the bell Sam shuffled to the center and until Godfrey struck him he had to hold his fire, for he couldn't see the man in front of him. He fought on in this way, feeling for his opponent and then, knowing where Godfrey was, unleashed prodigious drives. Sam finally connected and George was counted out.

Then we have another great athlete who pluckily fought on even though his sight was dimmed, by partial blindness—Chick Hafeey, outfielder of the Cardinals. For three years, in a game where good sight is paramount, Hafeey tussled with his handicap. And he won out. Conquered a condition which would have driven almost any other young ball player to despair when his left eye started to give him trouble, Chick changed his stance at the plate so that he might better gauge the flight of the ball. But he finally had to give in and undergo an operation. Today he is playing and hitting better than ever. A peek at the latest averages show that this young man is pounding the ball at a 380 gait. Quite a mark considering that only a year ago baseball critics were writing his playing obituary.
