BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

By George Barr McOutcheon

XIV.

The cablegram recalled Brewster to the study of his chief problem, the dispersal of the remainder of his grandfather's fortune. The cruise was sure to have cost $400,000 and he decided to add to the total by a trip to the North Cape. He figured that this would cut down the balance by $30,000 more.

The announcement of his new plan was ill-received by his guests. Many of them had engagements at home and they felt too that they were doing him an injury by allowing him to go on with his unexplained extravagance.

Finally they decided to upset his plan by desperate measures. With Bragdon pledged to keep Monty engaged elsewhere, they held a conference with Captain Perry and told him that while Brewster had been a rich man he must by this time have dissipated most of his fortune and that they were anxious to overrule his North Cape plan and return to New York.

Perry, however, said he could do nothing. He, the crew and the yacht were at Brewster's command.

"Then," said Mrs. Dan, "the only way is to do what Mr. Smith suggested this morning. We must tell the captain of it."

The meeting broke up an hour later. Peggy, recovered from her shock, was the sole rebel against their conspiracy, though she knew that the others were justified in the step they proposed to take.

Toward evening, Monty noticed that his guests were assembling in the bow, and started to join them. DeMille and Smith advance to meet him, the pictures of solemnity and decision.

"Monty," said DeMille, "we have been conspiring against you and have decided to sail for New York tomorrow."

"You have decided?" queries Monty.

"Yes," answered DeMille. "We cannot take the responsibility of your extravagance."

"Captain Perry," said Brewster, "will you take the yacht to any port where my guests may take ship for New York? The Flitter is to take me to the North Cape."

Bluebird Triumph of British Shops

LONDON, March 26.—(C.P.)—Sir Malcolm Campbell's new land speed record of more than 276 miles an hour at Daytona Beach is acclaimed here as another indication of the high speed achieved by the British aeronautical engineers.

It is pointed out the heart of Sir Malcolm's great car "Bluebird" is a 2,350 horsepower aero engine designed first for the Schneider Trophy contest of 1929 and improved in 1931. The aircraft engine was drawn upon in ample measure in redesigning the car for this year's runs.

"Bluebird" has an extraordinary history. It is a veteran. Much of its structure is still essentially the same as when it first emerged from the factory in 1924. Its first engine was a 450 horse-power aero engine. Further steps in power were demanded and the racing engine of 2,350 h.p. was installed. This, in many respects the most notable racing engine ever built, is a 12-cylinder water-cooled unit with the cylinders arranged V-fashion in two banks of six. It develops its power from a total engine weight of 1,630 pounds.

For Campbell's attempt this year the car was completely redesigned. Six months were spent in wind tunnel tests of various body shapes; the form adopted, though measuring in frontal area 19 1-2 square feet against the 15 1-2 square feet of the car in its previous guise, is almost a perfect streamline and, according to theoretical calculations, should increase the speed attainable from the same power by at least 30 miles an hour.

Other important alterations were the adoption of twin rear wheels to check wheel slip when accelerating and air brakes embodied in the normal braking system. When Campbell applies the brakes—with immense caution—after passing the end of the speed course, two hinged flaps in the steel skin just behind his cockpit are raised vertically to act as air brakes. The pressure of the pedal applies the wheel brakes. Another feature of the car taken direct from aircraft design is the huge streamlined stabilizing rear fin.

Turn to Liners For Model Ship

NEW YORK, March 27.—(C.P.)—A modern liner has supplanted the sailing ship as the subject of a display of model boats sponsored by the Model Builders' Guild of Hamptons. The show held here in the British Empire building—consists of 50 models of the liner Queen of Bermuda.

They were chosen from 12,000 submitted to the guild for the contest. A jury consisting of Vincent Astor, Sir Hubert Wilkins, Captain "Bob" Bartlett, Captain Felix Reisenberg, Donald MacMillan, William McPhee, Captain H. N. McSougall, Captain H. Jeffries Davis and Captain William Charlton, will select the five best models. The exhibitor will get trips to Bermuda for their pains.

Notable was the entry of James C. Reed, Plainfield, N. J. mechanic. A switch controlled a rheostat which provided lights in every porthole. Propellers of the life-boats on the model—only 12 inches in length from stem to stern—turn. The port and starboard propellers of the model itself turn in opposite directions as in the ship herself.

WOMEN who are experienced in home-dyeing, and professional dyers, too, often remark about the superior color beauty of Diamond Dyes. "Diamond" colors are so true," they say. "There are never any off-casts or dull, dead tones. All live, lustrous color, just like new material, with no spotting or streaking." The reason for this is that Diamond Dyes actually contain a greater amount of the finest aniline coloring. For permanent dark colors, by boiling, use Diamond Dyes. For light shades, without boiling, use the beautiful new Diamond Tints. All drug stores, 15c.
