Saved From War To Minister To Rugged Mission

This is one of a Canadian Press series gathered on a trip down the Mackenzie River to beyond the Arctic Circle.

By Guy E. Rhoades Canadian Press Staff Writer FORT SIMPSON, N. W. T., Aug. 26—(CP)—Compassion of a German officer whose name he does not know saved Oblate Father Alfred Gathy from death before a firing squad and sent him eventually to a Northwest Territories mission field covering an area far bigger than his native Belgium.

The brown-bearded priest, who carries peanuts in his pockets for native children and has conjuring for a hobby, came to Canada 10 years ago to take charge of the Roman Catholic mission at Fort Norman, more than 1,100 miles north of Edmonton. He stepped into a parish 600 miles long, extending east from Norman to Fort Reliance on Great Bear Lake and west to the foot of the Rocky Mountains.

To visit all his parishioners, 300 Indians, Father Gathy had to travel more than 2,000 miles, running on foot behind a dog sled in winter, paddling a canoe in summer and sweating over the fly-cursed portages.

Mother Saved Him

For six years he did that, then came to Simpson to take charge of the mission founded in 1889 by the 68-year-old Father Edouard Gouy, classmate of Flying Bishop Breynal, who came from Brittany as a young priest. Father Gouy, worn by the hard life of the frontier priest, expects to stay and die at Simpson. Old beyond his years, he do what work he can at the mission and to leave its direction to Father Gathy.

Death claimed Mrs. Janie L. Graham, daughter of Mrs. Jessie and Arthur Dunbar, on April 20, 1937, after several months' illness in the P. E. Island Hospital, Charlottetown. Mrs. Graham was 60 years of age and a native of Hopewell, N. S. As a young woman she took a position in Boston, U. S. A., which she held for ten years. During these years she met and married her husband, Mr. Ernest S. Graham, of Gasperaux, P. E. I. For ten years they lived in Boston and then returned to Prince Edward Island, having buried their eldest child, Mildred, in Boston.

Mrs. Graham leaves to mourn the loss of a devoted wife and loving mother, her husband, two sons, George and Arch, and one daughter, Irene, all at home. Also one sister (Catherine) Mrs. John Darrah, West Somerville, Mass., and one brother, Wm. J. Dunbar, in her old home, George returned home from Montreal to visit his mother several weeks before she passed beyond such a privilege.

During the many years that Mrs. Graham had lived in Gasperaux she was a communicant in the Murray Harbor North Presbyterian Church, where her fidelity and unselfishness won for her high regard and affection, not only from the members of the congregation, but also from the citizens of the town. She was loved by all and disrespected by none. Her Christian life and example go down in history as an example to all with whom she associated.

The funeral service was held at 2 o'clock on Friday, April 23, at the Presbyterian Church, Murray Harbor North, and was nicely conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. H. Douglas. The hymns were "Jesus, My Lord, My Soul," "Asleep in Jesus," "Will the Circle be Unbroken," "The Old Rugged Cross," and "Mrs. Minnie MacLure and Roulston Kennedy sang very nicely a duet, "Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown?" The funeral procession proceeded to the Murray Harbor North cemetery. The last and saddest rites being conducted, interment was brightened by beautiful flowers from many grief-stricken friends: A broken circle by the family; a pillow by her sister, Mrs. John Darrah; a wreath by her brother, Mr. Wm. J. Dunbar; and sprays by Mrs. Ada MacKay and Mrs. Wendell Graham.

The pall bearers were: Cameron Clow, James M. Graham, George G. Graham, Benj. Henderson, Alex. Graham and Ardell Graham. The hearse was driven by Mr. Eille Lewellyn, Gasperaux.

SUEDE TRIMS

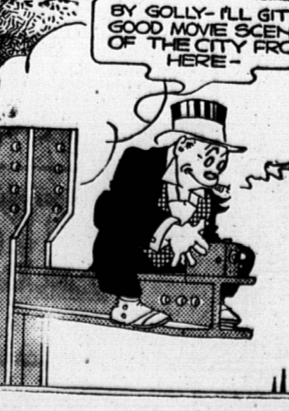

Suede is the very smart trimming for fall, particularly in the form of tremendous pockets on tweed suits or gabardine dresses.

NEW PUDDINGS

So often the pudding made in the morning would be very cooling and delicious if put into the freezing pan in the electric refrigerator. Try some of the plainer puddings out in this fashion, as well as the richer ones containing whipped cream.

Oil Well Helps Lower Gasoline For Far North

BY GUY E. RHOADES Canadian Press Staff Writer OIL WELLS, N. W. T., Aug. 26—(CP)—Ronald W. MacKinnon, a horseman from Guelph, Ont., looks like the late John D. Rockefeller and manages the world's most northerly operating oil well about 100 miles south of the Arctic Circle on the MacKenzie River.

Why little MacKinnon has been in the north altogether 10 years since 1920 and twice has walked on snowshoes from this little settlement to Fort McMurray, head of the Northern Alberta Railway's muskeg line, 1,300 miles south. His two gruelling treks behind dog teams, each two months long, are not MacKinnon's and the world's most northerly operating oil well about 100 miles south of the Arctic Circle on the MacKenzie River.

Oil Well products go in barrels throughout the western north-land, 200,000 gallons of Diesel oil to the mining fields of Great Bear Lake, up the Bear River to the mining fields of Great Slave Lake. It is long arduous work loading drums aboard barges and the company is building five tank barges, one of 70,000 gallons capacity for Great Bear Lake, three small tankers of 9,000 gallons capacity for the Bear River run and a 50,000-gallon one for Great Slave Lake.

Oil Well supplies the river and lake posts and the Western Arctic with 50,000 to 60,000 gallons of gasoline a year and MacKinnon's proud boast is the reduction in price he has been able to effect in the last seven years. In 1932, gasoline at Fort Norman costs $2 a gallon cash and $2.50 in trade. This year's price is 40 cents a gallon at Norman and a varying rate at Aklavik, depending on how much is on hand.

MacKinnon lives in the north. He stays during the four summer months only, then goes to Turner Valley for a spell and spends part of the winter in Guelph with his mother, Mrs. A. M. MacKinnon and his sister, Florence, or he goes to California.

OPPORTUNITY DAYS FRIDAY --- SATURDAY --- MONDAY. AUGUST 27th, 28th and 30th.

Quintuplets as Happy as Visitors When Outdoor Play Resumed

Hundreds of visitors to the Dionne quintuplet nursery gave a cheer when Dr. A. R. Dafee announced the five little ladies were completely recovered from their recent illness. Soon long lines were waiting to see them play in the outdoor nursery as gay as ever. No body seemed happier than the quintuplets themselves when the twicedaily play period was reopened. They quickly pulled up two deck chairs for a session with the photographer, apparently anxious to show how well they are. Cecile (LEFT) last to be released, appeared a little surprised at the fuss, but Yvonne sat beside her waving merrily as long as the cameraman remained nearby. Marie took it up standing between the chairs. Annette was so busy making room on her chair, she forgot to watch for the birdie. Emilie was first to suffer, but one of the first to cover. Her idea of good camera tactics was to stand on a chair and shout to her heart's content.
