"These Women"

BY MALCOLM DUART

CHAPTER XXXII

Audrey's hand was outstretched as she crossed to where Parrish was standing.

"Oh Mr. Parrish," she said, sweetly, "I've been waiting for you."

He looked astonished. "I said I'd be here at seven," he said. "It isn't quite seven yet."

"I didn't mean that," she told him. "I just occurred to me that instead of eating dinner here, it would be nice if you and I went out some place to eat, so we could dance a little."

"But aren't you tired?" he protested. "The last I saw of you this afternoon, you looked as if you were going to wilt."

She dimpled again at him. It was the first time that she ever had treated him with such cordiality, and his face was beaming.

"But I'm all rested now," she said, "and I've been home so much in the evenings that I'd like to go some place."

Morton listened to this colloquy in quiet amusement. "My dear," he said, "you'll be losing a good cook for me. Half the evenings you are too tired to eat dinner, and now, when dinner for three is almost ready to serve, there'll be only one here to eat it."

"Be a good daddy and don't scold," she urged. "I haven't had any fun for a long time, and Mr. Parrish tells me that he can dance now."

Her maid appeared with a light cape and Audrey led Parrish out the door. His face was rosy with pleasure, and he forgot to bid Morton goodnight. His guitar remained beside the door.

The older man stood thinking for a time, and then slowly turned his back and moved to the center room. He stood beside the long table, knocking on it thoughtfully with his knuckles. At last he turned to the telephone, and called Nona's apartment. Her voice answered him.

"Didn't think I'd catch you in," he told her. "But the young people have left me alone tonight, with a dinner on my hands, and nobody to eat it. Can you come over and be my guest?"

"But I have a date," she told him. "I was just ready to go out."

"Too bad," he said. "Run along then, and have a good time. I'll try somebody else."

"No—no—no!" the girl cried. "I'll bet you'll call up Lois, or Camilla, or one of those girls. I'll come!"

Hoarseness, Sore Throat Quickly Relieved. Treat It Tonight—This Way

If the throat is sore, inflamed or swelled, prompt relief comes from Nervilleine to the throat and chest, and rub it in. Don't be afraid to rub hard—Nervilleine won't blister or burn.

NERVILLEINE is so penetrating that it sinks through the pores of the skin, and quickly penetrates to the source of the pain. It is quickly absorbed into the tissues, and astonishing improvement is noticed in most cases very soon after it is applied.

Just the thing to keep handy on the shelf for Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, and the hundred minor aches and pains that arise in every family. Gains a large 35-cent bottle today.

"But what about that appointment of yours?"

"I should worry about the old appointment!" she said. "I'll break it. Be over right away."

"She came, half an hour later, in a new gown, low cut and close fitting. It was black, with a little flash of silver tissue where the waist folded across her bosom.

"You are lovely, Nona," said Morton, holding her hands. "Who bought it for you?"

"She was not disturbed at his question. "Bought it myself," she told him.

"His eye passed over the expensive garment. "Didn't know you had come into an inheritance," he commented.

"Inheritance nothing!" she laughed. "I haven't done a lick of work in two months, and haven't had a cent of salary. I was just on my own clothes. So I went and sold that diamond and platinum bar pin you gave me."

He gave an exclamation of concern.

"Her hands still were in his. "You don't mind if I sold your present?" she asked him.

"Why didn't you tell me you needed money?" he said. "I didn't want you to sell your jewelry—and it was my fault, anyway, I versed you leave your place with the show to rehearse with Audrey, and never did a thing to make it up to you."

"She lifted one of his hands, and kissed it. "I'd starve any time, for," she said gaily, "but I CAN'T do without new clothes!"

"She dropped her voice as she continued: "You know Harry, dear, I haven't been around with any other men, for more than six months—since I got to know you well."

He drew her hands together, patted them, and dropped them.

"How about that dinner engagement of yours this evening?" he asked her.

"Oh, I have to eat, sometimes," she told him. "But I mean I haven't been out on any parties. Really I haven't!"

Morton rang for Audrey's maid, and Nona followed the girl up to the dressing room at the head of the stairs. She reappeared in a few minutes, and Morton led her out to dinner.

"Some cocktails," Morton told the butler, as they sat down, "and let's have some of that wine that just came in. Has it been chilled?"

The butler bowed.

"We'll have a little port pretty soon, too."

The man bowed again, and went after the cocktails.

"This is a beautiful room," Nona said, looking at the heavy tapestry that draped the walls. "Harry, I never realized until lately that you were such a rich man."

Morton did not follow her comment.

ECZEMA IN RASH AND BLISTERS

Had to Keep Hands Bandaged. Cuticura Healed.

"Eczema broke out in a rash and blisters between my fingers and on the backs of my hands. The skin was red and swollen and used to peel off. It itched and burned badly and was awfully sore especially when I put my hands in water. I had to keep my hands bandaged."

"I sent for a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and it helped me. I purchased more and used one case of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment. My skin was completely healed." (Signed) Miss Nettie Keeso, R. R. 1, Listowel, Ontario.

national lead. Instead placing his hand over hers as they lay on the cloth, he asked her: "Have you been vamping your Parrish?"

She threw back her head and laughed merrily. "You knew I was going to!" she accused.

"I rather suspected it," he said, "but you know the reason Audrey went out with him this evening? Because she thinks you're a dangerous influence upon the young man?"

The butler appeared with the cocktails, and the conversation ceased as they slipped at the cold, pearly liquid. The butler withdrew.

"He keeps these cocktails on them up one day, for use the next. That gives them a chance to ripen."

"The girl nodded approvingly. "It's the nicest I ever tasted," she agreed.

Returning to the subject of Audrey and Parrish, she went on: "There was just one way to interpose that girl in Parrish, and that was to get her to think some other girl was interested in him, too. And how it worked! She takes a chair and sits down with her, when she's so tired, and her feet hurt so, that she can hardly stand!"

Morton smiled. "She dropped in she had been together," he said, "when they went out together, she was tripping along as if she had just awakened in the morning."

"He's here," Nona said, "so of course she'll fight to keep him. But if she doesn't really want him, she just wants to keep some other woman from getting him."

The butler brought in the hors d'oeuvres.

After they were served, he brought a bottle of wine in a napkin, and held it for Morton's inspection. The latter nodded, when the cork was drawn and the servant filled the hollow stemmed glasses that stood at the two plates.

"I like this," Nona said, tasting the wine.

"I think it's good," agreed Morton.

"No, I don't mean that," said the girl. "I mean like this—living as if you were somebody. She and being waited on by people that you hire, instead of eating around at restaurants, or munching a loaf of bread up in your room because you have no invitation to dine."

"You mean you don't eat unless somebody invites you out?" Morton asked.

"Not exactly," Nona said, dipping into the hors d'oeuvres with her fork. "but there are lots of days when we have no money—girls like me."

"She laughed. "There's an old fellow around a town, about seventy—to lots of us. He isn't very clean, and he's uncommonly ugly, but he has lots of money. So every night, a lot of girls who are hungry, and haven't any other invitations, wish themselves on him. He'll eat dinner with us some nights. She laughed again, but Morton did not join her.

"I don't like that," he said, slowly. "It's a shame that a girl like you should have to sponge off a greasy old pig. I've seen him, with a lot of little girls around him smirking at them, while they eat his dinner."

"Oh," said Nona, "he's not dangerous. I think he's just lonesome."

"Like most of us," Morton commented.

There was a pause, while the next course was served. When they were alone again, Morton said "Nona, I want you to have that pin back again. I really wanted you to have it."

"It was something funny about that pin," Nona said. "Why did you buy it for me, Harry?"

He thoughtfully considered his spoon, as he held it poised half way to his lips. "I'll tell you frankly, Nona," he said, putting down the spoon.

"Audrey thought she was in love with me. I suppose she WAS in love with me. She is a young thing, just at the age when girls and boys are ready to find their mates. I was the only man at hand and she fell in love with me. That wouldn't do. I simply couldn't permit it. And so I hired Parrish, and I threw her into his company, and I let her see me with you, and with some other girls, in the hope that she might become disgusted with me—at least as a matrimonial prospect. I bought the pin partly so you could show it to her."

"His voice showed it to her."

"He touched the table softly. "I don't know just how it's going to work. She went wild, and said she was going on the stage, to learn how other girls attract men. That is, how they managed to attract me. I never have forbidden her to do anything, and I didn't forbid her to do

Old Windmill on Cod Now Sought By Ford

YARMOUTH, Mass., July 30—It's a broad step from automobiles to windmills, but Henry Ford has spanned the gap.

He has made a bid for a windmill which was catching the Cape Cod breeze when the embattled farmers of Concord were making history. There are other would-be purchasers and it is not yet certain whether Mr. Ford will be able to add the mill to his collection of New England antiques.

Boys Played in Arms

Daniel Wing of Hingham, who as a boy sixty year ago helped to operate the mill, recalls how the boys of the mill played in arms.

He said he would not be without The Maple Leaf for a good deal.

Mr. McRae has a brother living in Los Angeles who is also a house building contractor. He informed Mr. McRae that Mr. John McQuaid of San Luis Obispo just left on a three month tour of Europe. They will visit Ireland, the native home of Mr. McQuaid. The maiden name of Mrs. McQuaid was Catherine McRae, a sister of William McRae. They have lived in San Luis Obispo 21 years.

The parish of San Luis Obispo is building an up to date convent school in town, that will cost, when completed, approximately $90,000.

The contractor is no other than William McRae of Paso Robles, who is a native of Kensington, P. E. I. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. McRae at the new convent today. He has been in California twenty-five years, he said, and has always been in the building business.

He apparently enjoys good health and is no light weight. If Kensington remembers of meeting Mr. McRae on other days they should see him now. I think he would be a good match with any of the famous Rory McDonalds for throwing the sledge hammer.

He understood me to say he was not married. So if you hear of him taking a trip back East soon or next year, he may carry away one of the handsome "Blue Noses" of the Province. Who knows but what the lucky one might be of Prince Edward Island. I asked him if he had ever heard of me. "Never in the world," he said. But he confided to me that he had read of The Maple Leaf. He had a merry twinkle in his eye.
