DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it!

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

Be sure of everything you do. And there'll be little you will rue.—Old Mother Nature.

"Go on," growled Three-legs, the big Coon, so called because he had lost a front leg. He had left it long before in the cruel, relentless jaws of a steel trap.

"Why? Why can't we get that fish in that little hole? Why should we leave it there for some one else to get?" whined the handsome young Coon just ahead of him. It was his son, now so big that he was as big as his father. But he wouldn't have his father's wisdom then, for he wouldn't have had his father's experience then. It is from experience that wisdom springs.

"Go on," growled Three-legs again as the young Coon scrambled up the rocky steep bank. Three-legs followed at his heels. At the top they stopped to look down to the edge of the water. From a shallow hole in the bank close to the water a delectable smell, came up to them. That it was a delectable smell for anyone who likes fish, and the Coon folk dearly love fish.

Three-legs followed at his heels

"One of us could have reached in and pulled that fish out and taken it with us. It is a shame to leave it there," complained the young Coon.

"Better to leave it there than not to be able to leave there yourself," growled Three-legs.

"What do you mean? Why shouldn't I be able to leave there with that fish? What could stop me?" The young Coon looked puzzled. He was puzzled. "One of those terrible things that took my leg," replied Three-legs. He meant a steel trap.

The young Coon's eyes opened wide. He was startled. "Is there one of those things down there?" he asked as he stared down where that hole in the bank opened at the edge of the water. "I don't see one," he added.

"Of course you don't. If there is one it is like that there is," replied Three-legs.

"Do you know that there is one there?" persisted the other.

Three-legs shook his head. "No," said he. "I don't know that there is, but there may be one there and I think it like that there is."

The young Coon looked as disappointed as he felt, and that was very disappointed indeed. His nose was still twitching from that delectable smell. "You didn't see one of those dreadful things. You didn't know that one is there. You didn't know anything wrong. Yet you were afraid to just reach in and take that fish. It seems silly to me," rumbled the young Coon.

"I didn't say I didn't see anything wrong. I did, and I do now when I look down there," replied Three-legs.

The young Coon stared down at the foot of the bank and into the shallow water. "I don't. What is wrong?" said he.

"Have you ever been here before?" asked Three-legs.

"More times than I can remember," replied the other.

"Did you ever see that hole in the bank before? Did you ever smell fish there before?" asked the three-legged one.

"No-o," replied the other slowly. "I don't remember that I ever did."

"You didn't because there never was a hole or fish there before. Why are they there now? Who put them there. Some one dug that place in the bank and put that fish in there. What for? When you find something strange in or about a familiar place keep away from it. You'll live longer," declared Three-legs. "Forget that fish and come along," he added as he started down the bank.

It was sound advice. A cruel trap was just under water and hidden by the furry folk just where one of them is to reach in for that bait in the hole. The alluring smell was from strong fish oil on the bait.
