SPEED OF NEWS DESTROYS ISOLATION

Illustrating the increasing speed of communication with other parts of the world, an official of the Australian Post Office said when the first telegraph service was begun in Victoria the Crimean War began. It was 114 days before Australia knew that war had been declared. News of the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War in 1870 took 45 days to reach Australia. Messages from the first Test cricket match at Nottingham last year reached Melbourne radio stations in the average time of 1.9 minutes.

STOPPED FOR GANGSTER

During the hue and cry that was raised for Pretty Boy Floyd, U. S. gangster, Peterson was often stopped on the highways by state police in search of the criminal. Those were dangerous days to be travelling the highways.

Finds People Kind

With minor exceptions his contacts with the people on the trail from Canada to Mexico have given him a faith in humanity. "Traveling with little money a man might find people hard and unkind, but my experience was different," he said. He managed to finance despite his meagre capital. He washed dishes, the decks of a ferry boat, and did other jobs when he needed a meal.

Life Threatened

More than once his life and liberty were threatened during his unusual adventures. In New York he started out to explore the Hudson tunnel, now under construction. He went too far and got into an air chamber. He was rescued by the tunnel workers.

Canada Full of Interest to Tourist

MONTREAL, Que., Sept. 10.—Canada holds more unexplored possibilities, both for writer and sportsman, than any other country, declared Rex Beach, internationally known writer who reached Montreal on the Continental Limited of Canadian National Railways this morning. Mr. Beach was returning from a trip which took him to Alaska via Canada. In Alaska he visited the settlement projects of the United States Government, and also renewed acquaintances in the territories he knew when he began writing his series of gold rush books. In Canada he paused long enough at Jasper National Park in the Rockies to test the new rainbow trout fishing at Amethyst Lake in the Tonquin Valley, and he declared it more than lived up to advance notices. "I talked fishing with people from Jasper to the coast," declared Mr. Beach, "and I am convinced that in addition to this marvelous rainbow trout fishing at Amethyst, where I was a member of the first party to fish the lake since its planting, you have unequalled rainbow trout fishing from Jasper to the Pacific coast."

"Canada is full of interest, there are so many things going on here. The exploration work which is being done all over Canada with airplanes, and other means, more discovery of mineralized areas, is an object lesson to the world. I advised the Alaska people to take a leaf out of Canada's book. Do you know, there

Man With Donkey Australian Hero

MELBOURNE, Sept. 10.—"The Man with the Donkey" was the hero of the Australian troops during the Gallipoli campaign. He was a stretcher-bearer, and soon after the landing, he commanded a stray donkey and with it worked night and day bringing in the wounded. He was allowed a free hand by his officer, and roamed at will about the front lines or wherever the wounded needed help. He would never tell anything about himself, nor even give his name. One day his donkey came back alone, and that was the end of a story of simple devotion and heroism.

Now "The Man with the Donkey," whose name was Simpson, is to be immortalized in marble, and a site has been chosen near the Observatory in Melbourne.— Australian Press Bureau.

Jimmy The Orang Destroys Evidence

Whether "Jimmy" the orang-utang at the zoo in Melbourne, Australia, with criminal intent, decided to destroy evidence against him when his finger prints were taken recently by the police is not proved, but after the second impression had been taken he seized the inked board and the finger print slip, calmly ate the latter, with prints and all complete, and walked off in high dudgeon to his den, clasping the board.

Flying Eggs That Hatched Chicks

Two experiments in sending eggs from England to Australia, by air-mail, and hatching them there successfully have demonstrated the possibilities of introducing new blood to Australian poultry flocks without the risk and expense of sending mature birds by sea. Two Rhode Island settings were sent from Lord Greenaway's farm at Romsey, Hampshire, to E. P. Finney, assistant secretary of the poultry club of New South Wales. One setting treated by a special process to minimize evaporation hatched out perfectly, the untreated setting although containing chicks failed to hatch.—Australian Press Bureau.

SCHOOL TEACHER Cycles 14,000 Miles For Health

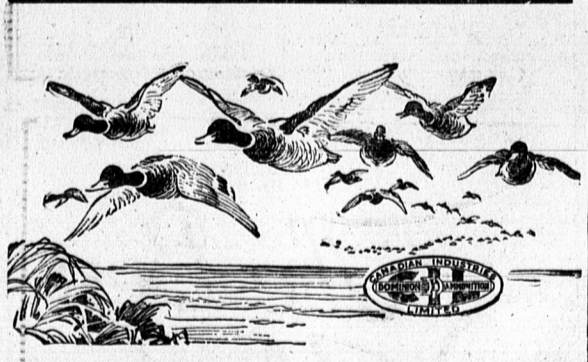

The following write-up has been received by Mr. John T. Inman, Hampton, from Mr. Harold Peterson of Assiniboia, Sask., who stopped with Mr. Inman overnight in July last while in P. E. I. on his 14,000 mile bicycle trip. Mr. Peterson expressed thanks for the hospitality extended him at that time and trusts that he may again have the pleasure of meeting his host: Harold L. Peterson, 28-year-old Assiniboia school teacher, came to the end of a long trail in search of health in Regina Friday. One year ago his doctor was worried about his physical condition. He advised against the class room and suggested the outdoors.

SPLASH AND SLOSH GREAT WORM EATERS

"Splash" and "Slosh", two playpuses at the Sir Colin Mackenzie native fauna sanctuary near Melbourne, Australia, are causing their keepers considerable worry and not a little hard labor. Their diet, which consists primarily of 500 earthworms each day, is becoming increasingly difficult to satisfy. In order to cope with their voracious appetites their keepers have to dig holes near the creek as deep as 6 ft., and frequently, a two-mile journey down the creek and a six to eight hours' digging job is involved in securing 1,000 juicy worms. "Splash" has attained his second birthday in captivity, and has created a record, for never before has a playpuse survived in captivity.— Australian Press Bureau.

AMERICAN POETRY WINS HIGH PRAISE

T. Inglis Moore, in an address to the Australian English Association, referring to the complexity and variety which racial differences gave to American poetry, said it was, perhaps, a literary tragedy that Australia's inhabitants were almost 100 per cent. British. Mr. Moore said that in the realms of poetry and architecture America had made valuable and creative contributions to civilization. Modern American poetry had as its principal characteristic dynamic realism, and modern English poetry in comparison sometimes appeared tepid and weak. American poets were reminiscent of the Elizabethans in their freshness of outlook, audacity, and occasional over-exuberance. Two strains could be traced through their poetry—the insurgency of the Middle West and the more restrained and academic contribution of New England. This fact, added to the negro element, the element of dialect and racial variety, and a fondness for experiment, gave it a complexity at once strange and fascinating.—Australian Press Bureau.

"Dot" Of Paradise For Island Colony

An Englishman, named Harris, visiting Australia, has just bought a "200 - acre dot of a paradise," as he calls it, on the Great Barrier Reef, off the Queensland coast, as a preliminary, to founding a colony there. The "dot" is Bedarra, a picturesque coral island six miles out. It is completely uninhabited, very fertile, and much of it covered with tropical vegetation, mahogany and bloodwood. A party of English friends will join him. They will out themselves off from the rest of the world, and grow fruit and coconuts. Richards Island, another "dot" in the Great Barrier Reef, already has been bought by Ivan Menzies, the Gilbert E. Sullivan opera comedian. He has indicated his intention of founding a new colony, the nucleus of which will be an English chemist and his wife, two public schoolboys, and their mother—a former Queensland— Australian Press Bureau.

PHOTOGRAPHER HITS FOR HINTERLAND

What is claimed to be the longest motor caravan in the world has just been parading the streets of Melbourne, Australia. It is 45 feet long and it cost $10,000 to build. It belongs to an enterprising Melbourne photographer, who, believing that there are many prospective customers "up country" who are unable to come to his studio, is going to take his studio to them. The caravan in which the photographer and his wife will live, has all kinds of devices for conserving space. The interior is chrom-plated and walnut-paneled.— Australian Press Bureau.

Peggy, the two-year-old Khaki-Campbell duck, owned by Miss Avis Treloar, of Woorak West, out in Australia, throws out a challenge to all comers. She laid an egg a day for 14 days, including five with double yolks, and capped her magnificent effort on the 15th day with one containing three yolks, astonishing her owner when it was broken into a basin; it was an outside in eggs and well worth quacking about.— Australian Press Bureau.
