FLYING FOXES OF INDIA.

During the Day They Sleep in Trees, Hanging Head Downward.

People who have lived in India are familiar with the long strings of flying foxes which can often be seen wending their way in single file from their sleeping places in remote trees to the fruit gardens upon which they prey.

These curious creatures, says a writer in the Wide World Magazine, sometimes measure as much as four feet across the wings and have reddish brown fur and mole colored wings. After their nocturnal depreations they fly away with the dawn to a tree in some isolated place and there rest during the day, hanging head downward from the boughs in the manner of bats, clutching the branch with their feet.

As the flying foxes gather on the tree selected there is a tremendous commotion, for each newcomer is vigorously driven off from one place after another until he eventually manages to secure a perch for himself. Those on the tree meanwhile keep up an incessant wrangling, each endeavoring to secure the highest and best place to rest on. Sometimes many hundreds of these destructive creatures may be seen hanging from the branches of a large tree.

When opportunity offers they are often shot, and some of the natives consider their flesh a delicacy, though it hardly appeals to Europeans.

A Personal Preference.

A well known magazine writer moved not so very long ago from Brooklyn to California. On the day before the family started west he went for a walk through the neighborhood with his four-year-old son.

"I suppose," said the father, "that you'll be sorry to leave all your little chums here?"

The youngster thought he would. At that he did not seem to show much emotion at the prospect of parting from all his friends.

"Which one will you miss the most?" inquired the parent.

The boy was not sure.

"Now," pressed his father, "which little boy of all the little boys you know do you like the best?"

The little chap considered a minute before answering.

"Well," he said at last, "I guess I like myself pretty well!"—Saturday Evening Post.

Uses of Menu Cards.

"It wouldn't take so many menu cards to carry us through at dinner," said the head waiter, "if people didn't scribble so many notes on them and make them unfit for use. Memoranda of all kinds are jotted down on these cards during a meal. Arithmetical puzzles are solved, the particulars of business deals are worked out, financial problems are wrestled with, sonnets are composed, and social engagements are made and broken. The fact is I have seen about everything written on a menu card except a popular novel, and no doubt I've found the plots of some of them."—New York Times.

Ficks.

"Popularity is very fickle," exclaimed the offhand orator.

"What's the trouble?"

"Every time I get a crowd interested in my remarks an automobile tire blows out and the audience rushes off to see what the matter is."—Washington Star.

Wonderful Mouse.

"Oh, mamma," exclaimed small Willie, "I'm sure there is a great big mouse in my bedroom!"

"Did you see it, dear?" she asked.

"No, I didn't see the mouse," replied Willie, "but I heard it wagging its tail."—Chicago News.

AN ANIMAL IN PAIN.

It Suffers Less Than Man on Account of Its Low Intelligence.

It is a platitude that "pain is as one feels it." But that statement falls a considerable way short of the truth. The measure of pain undoubtedly depends as much upon realization, comparison and constructive memory as upon sensation. In other words, the individual with the most highly developed imagination enjoys and suffers most intensely, though not perhaps most violently. Pain and death are terrible in proportion as one is capable of relating them to experience. To children they are not terrible in this sense, because children have small experience and even smaller powers of imagining relations.

In the case of animals the power of constructing a memory picture and relating the same to present conditions is probably exceedingly low, if not entirely absent. Pain to an animal represents an unpleasant experience begun and ended sharply. It is unrelated. It has no social or moral significance. It is not terrible in the wide sense. An animal lives from moment to moment. At any given moment its happiness is a question in the main of physical comfort. The caged skylark (though it must not be supposed that this is any defense of an objectionable practice) experiences none of the misery of the caged man. It does not know that its liberty is hopelessly lost. It cannot relate its present position to past experience in the way in which a prisoner can and must do. The cage is merely an accidental obstruction which may at any moment disappear. Should the bird stop struggling it does so because struggling is unpleasant, not because it is hopeless.—London Chronicle.

Highly Practical.

"Your business college for young ladies seems to be all right."
"It is all right."
"Do you give the girls a good practical business training?"
"In reply to that question I can only say that 60 per cent of our graduates marry their employers the first year."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Issue of $90,000 New Stock at $100

a Share, Par Value

-IN-

Seal River Black Fox Company Limited

This issue is for the purpose of adding five pairs of foxes to the ranch at the same low price per pair as that at which the foxes now owned by the company are capitalized.

The history of the Silver Black Fox industry of Prince Edward Island is now too well known to need repetition here, and we will only state some facts concerning this company since its beginning nearly three years ago.

The company have eight pairs of breeders, Black Silver Foxes (pedigreed "Royal Blacks") now in their ranch at Seal River.

It is proposed to add five pairs of their 1914 pups to the ranch making a total of thirteen pairs—Should it be impossible or inadvisable to add the five pairs, then the proposed increased capitalization will be reduced by eighteen thousand dollars for every pair not so added.

This is not a first year pup proposition but a going concern of three years standing, and a dividend payer of an average of about one hundred and forty-five per cent. for every year since its inception.

The proposed addition of the five pairs of pups to the eight pairs of breeders now in the ranch, will greatly enhance its value, insure greater stability of the company and the continuance of large dividends.

From the beginning the ranch has been under the management of Mr. W. A. Jenkins who has had over five years experience breeding foxes.

No disease of any kind has ever appeared amongst the foxes and the ranch, being miles from other ranches, is not liable to epidemics. Situated as it is along the sea shore perfect drainage is ensured; and the increased ventilation installed in the dens last year, keeps it in a most sanitary condition. These factors no doubt largely account for the excellent returns this year.

No percentage or commission goes to the ranch as it is owned by the shareholders. In addition to his salary the manager is paid for the feed (up keep) of the foxes; the balance (with the exception of taxes, repairs, etc.) goes to the shareholders.

Estimated Profits for 1915

13 pairs of foxes should produce	19 pairs pups
19 pairs pups at $10,000 a pair	$190,000.00
Less managers salary, taxes, feed, repairs, etc., say	4,500.00
leaving a balance of	$185,500.00
or over seventy-five per cent on the paid up capital.

Application for shares may be made to any of the directors. Terms—Twenty per cent with application and the balance on or before first October 1914, after which date shares will be allotted. Applications will be dated as received and in case of the stock being oversubscribed the shares will be allotted in order in which applications were received.
