Myrna Loy Wins New Triumphs In Stirling Spy Role "Stamboul Quest" At Strand

When a beautiful spy neglects her duty to her country to fall in love, she invariably signs her own death warrant.

Out of this unwritten law of espionage, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has produced a vitally gripping screen drama that is different from all of its spy predecessors.

"The picture is 'Stamboul Quest,' with Myrna Loy and George Brent, which opened yesterday at the Strand Theatre.

Miss Loy, heretofore seen in supporting roles, carries off the major portion of the honors that must be contributed for the class of entertainment that this picture contains.

As 'Fraulein Doktor,' Germany's mysterious spy, Miss Loy is despatched to Turkey to trap All Bey, a high military official suspected of 'selling out' to the enemy.

A Hazardous Mission

The mission is a most dangerous one, but made doubly hazardous for 'Fraulein Doktor' by the persistent pursuit of Douglas Beall, a dashing young American. He is madly in love with Miss Loy whom he does not suspect as a secret service agent.

To serve her country, 'Fraulein Doktor' condemns her sweetheart to death. The subsequent developments make this one of the most gripping and intense love dramas seen upon the screen in many moons.

George Brent plays the role of Beall and no better choice could have been made. C. Henry Gordon, always dependable, is seen as All Bey, the Turkish General and Lionel Atwill deserves honorable mention for his characterization of Sturm, chief of the German counter espionage system.

Close Escape From Death

YARBOURTH, N. S., Feb. 21. - When two companions hauled a bench from under 17-year-old Willard Scott of Plymouth, N.S., while he was working a rotary saw today, the youth had a narrow escape from death. He fell forward - directly upon the swift moving teeth - but stuck his arm out to stop the fall. Forty stitches were required to close the wounds and he is in danger of losing the arm.

A Complete Examination Necessary

After you have your car put into as good condition as possible you should be equally careful of your sight. Your life and lives of others may depend upon your ability to see as you should. Be as well equipped as your car and thus reduce the hazards of driving. A complete examination is always necessary.

INSURANCE

North raised the question of the advisability of an advisory committee being appointed to work with the commission.

Premier Bennett said there was no more important provision of the bill than this. The duty of the committee would be to watch the solvency of the insurance fund. It would be composed of public-minded Canadians who would give their services voluntarily.

Opposition members said it was the purpose of the commission to safeguard the fund and not the committee. Why the duplication?

the next five years. The funds were required and would be used for the following and other purposes:

1. Field service to packs, troops and crews.
2. Educational literature and public material.
3. Headquarters maintenance.
4. Camping equipment.
5. Training of leaders.
6. Organization and direction of displays, rallies, etc.
7. Supply departments for books and badges.
8. Organization of new troops, etc.

For the benefit of those new to scouting, it was part of the Scout's law he must carry the money for his uniform. He also emphasized the fact that there were no paid Scout officers in the province, so that every dollar subscribed would be used for Scouting purposes exclusively. He then called upon His Honour.

His Honour said it was a pleasure to be associated with such a large and enthusiastic body of ladies and gentlemen interested in the spread and development of this great Boy Scout movement. To the Scout, Lord Baden-Powell and he was sure they all joined with him in wishing the Chief a happy birthday and many happy returns. He referred to the objects of the campaign and said some of the things he had in mind for reaching the objectives; but he for his part had no doubt and if asked would answer in the words of the popular song, but changing the negative to the affirmative, 'yes, one thousand times yes.' He referred to the work done by the Boy Scout Association and said none better had ever been devised. If all boys could be induced to take and live up to the Boy Scout Promise, the future of our country would be secure as we would have a noble body of citizens. His Honour referred to an incident a few years ago when he came in contact with a Boy Scout official on the train to Montreal. This story is told elsewhere in this issue.

Provincial Commissioner William Warren then gave an interesting account of the work done by the Boy Scouts and Rover Scouts, much of which was a revelation to those present.

Mr. J. J. Morris, honorary campaign treasurer, then gave a short address giving instructions to the campaign team and asked them to assist the comfort of his passengers.

Mr. R. C. Parent, Provincial Scout Secretary, gave a brief outline of the arrangements made for carrying the campaign and pointed out from today until March 4, the headquarters of the campaign would be at the Rover Scout den, 181 Great George Street.

Premier MacMillan then gave the closing address, rousing the enthusiasm of those present to a high degree. He said the aims and objects of the Boy Scout movement were the same as those of Christianity and it was his bounden duty of everyone of all denominations to support the movement with money as well as morally. The Chief Scout for Canada was the representative of His Majesty the King and the Chief Scout for the province was the representative here. What better example could there be to follow than that of His Majesty's representatives. Referring to the objectives of the Boy Scout movement the Premier said they were essentially necessary at this time to the country and our youths in proper channels. He said doubts had been expressed by some that the monetary objective would be attained because they said there was not much money circulating at present. He disagreed with this and said the objective could be attained as there was an abundance of money being spent today in amusements and luxuries, a fraction of which set apart for the Boy Scout campaign would put it over the top.

During the evening a delightful programme of vocal music was contributed by the Holy Redeemer troop, under Scoutmaster Driscoll with Mr. Leo Doucette at the piano.

E. J. Garland (UFA Bow River) asked why there was no advisory committee to supervise the radio commission or the civil committee in England. It was because the fund in that country was administered by a minister and not a commission. The clause in the committee passed without division.

An effort would be made to ensure an equitable representation of the various employes' and labor organizations on the advisory committee the Prime Minister stated. He was answering Hon. Ernest Lapointe (Lab. Quebec East) who said one labor organization had in the past got the majority of appointments where labor representatives were selected for such bodies.

Mr. Bennett said there were three labor bodies in the country and Mr. Lapointe was fully aware of the difficulty of giving representation to all. The Government's hands were tied on representation between these bodies on the delegation to the international labor conference because the international rule specified the organization with the largest membership should be that from which the employes' representatives were selected. No such stipulation was placed in the bill regarding representation on the advisory committee. The clause provided that one or two members, other than the chairman, should be appointed 'after consultation with organizations representative of workers.' This left the way open to the Government to make an effort to obtain commissioners representing more than one labor organization.

On each gun platform, directly back of the guns, were placed the ammunition boxes secured by bolts to the platforms, so arranged that in case of attack the front could be dropped to allow the gunners access to the shells. Unknown to the gunners below, someone had tampered with the bolts on the platform and had nearly succeeded in loosening it from its fastenings when he was undoubtedly surprised at his job and skipped leaving the box held only by one bolt. With every roll and pitch of the ship, the box would have gone overboard unnoticed by any one because of the inky blackness of the night.

Sunny Jim must have discovered the swaying ammunition box just as he left my cabin. He had propped himself against it with his feet braced against the angle irons on the edge of the platform, and with his yells for help unheard, not daring to leave it for a minute, was so found in the gray light of early morning.

He was frozen in, and had held the box solid even though unconsciously through probably the last moments of his life. He was as tight as a drum. We didn't have a doctor aboard, as we were one of those under privileged ships who had a motley crew of men picked from the docks of several seaport towns, the only regular Navy men being the gunners and the three radio men.

We all knew that Sunny Jim was dying but the Captain would not give him up. He knelt down beside the boy, who was hunched in blankets, and his face was frozen almost beyond recognition, whose eyes were sightless and whose lips were feebly trying to shape some last words to the Captain. Those of us who were down on the deck beside him whispered to catch the faint glimpse of his face. 'Captain, I'm not afraid to die.'

'No! No! my boy, you are not going to die. You are not going to leave us,' was all the Captain would say. Tears, unchecked, ran down his cheeks as he tried to get back the boy who must have known in his own little heart, that his work on earth was done.

Again Sunny Jim whispered, 'Captain, have I done my good turn? Tell me you believe in God.' 'Yes, Sunny Jim, do you want to die? Well, turn, but you mustn't die. Don't leave us now, we need you more than ever.'

'Captain,' whispered Sunny Jim, 'Remember, a Scout is brave.'

He left us all there in the little compartment in the after part of the ship, each feeling, I am sure in our own poor way, as if we had been touched by an angel's hand. Our Sunny Jim had gone to a better place and I knew that in that crew of desperadoes, hard-boiled, working and rough seamen, who in many instances, could not write their own names, there was many a whispered prayer and many a high resolve to try and be like Sunny Jim and die with him.

We hurried him at sea. The Captain stood with bare head at the rail, a little Bible in his hand, the crew ranged round about the last earthly remains of Sunny Jim, wrapped carefully in the flag he loved and served so well.

As the Skipper thumbed the pages, trying to find some of the passages that Sunny Jim had tried so hard to get him to read, and then finding one particularly worn page, he read from Sunny Jim's own Bible, 'I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me shall not die' - his voice broke. He could read no more.

When he next spoke, it was to the crew. 'Well, Sunny Jim is dead, but we can go on. Somehow, I believe he will know if we try to be good men. I am going to think that Sunny Jim is always with us, cheering us by his happy smile. I do believe in that God of his, for I could almost hear him speak, when you see my dear Governor on the deck. 'Will you all try to be, with me, like Sunny Jim.'

As the body of our little shipmate was reverently consigned to the sea, I realized that the Captain was going to carry on for Sunny Jim.

So you see, my dear Governor, I have a very warm place in my heart for the program whose ideals can so strongly imbued themselves into ones very life. They become in fact, character itself. This boy lived and breathed the ideals of Scouting. I shall never forget him and neither will his influence ever leave my life.

Most respectfully yours,
GEORGE F. MORTON.

Returns From Business Trip

Interesting Address Delivered Last Evening By Rev. Dr. McMahon.

J. J. LEIGHTIZER

General business in the egg and poultry trade appears to be good, but large operators are not optimistic with regard to egg prices as they are taking large losses in their storage holdings this year, reports Capt. James Leightizer, of the local firm of George Leightizer and Company, who returned last night from a business visit to Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto.

While in Ottawa Captain Leightizer attended the meeting of the special poultry committee of the Canadian Produce Association held in conjunction with officials of the Department of Agriculture and the heads of the MacDonald College and the Ontario Agricultural College. The bacteriology, chemistry and poultry divisions of the Central Experimental Farm and the National Research Council were also represented. The meetings were held in the Confederation Building and also in the Chateau Laurier.

The discussions covered scientific production and other phases of the industry.

At Toronto Capt. Leightizer attended the general meeting of the Canadian Produce Association in the Royal York Hotel, at which representatives were present from as far west as Winnipeg. A general discussion in connection with the promotion of the industry a committee was appointed to confer further with the Dominion government as to grading regulations for eggs and poultry. Opinion was strongly favorable to the establishment of standard grades for all the provinces.

At this meeting the question of a marketing board for eggs and poultry was also discussed and a resolution was passed asking for the sanction of at least eighty per cent of the producers before action is taken. The Canadian Poultry Pool, Mr. Leightizer said, were fairly confident that the producers would ask for marketing legislation along this line.

VICTIM OF TRAGIC DEATH WAS ISLANDER

SACKVILLE, Feb. 21 - Samuel John McDonald, Sackville, found dead at Amherst Tuesday morning by the crew of train No. 19, was born in Murray River, P.E.I., son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Daniel John McDonald, and was 27 years of age. He came to Sackville about five years ago. He leaves his wife, formerly Miss Rose Wilson, Birmingham, Eng., now living in Truro, N. S., two brothers, Alex. Murray River, and Ernest, Uieq, P.E.I., and three sisters, Mrs. David Glover, Murray River; Mrs. William Mackay, High Bank, P.E.I.; and Mrs. Chester McEachern, Hopfield, P.E.I. An uncle, James McDonald, resides in Sackville. Funeral arrangements had not been completed tonight.

AMHERST, N. S., Feb. 21 - De-ciding that the tragic death of Samuel John McDonald, Sackville, was accidental, Dr. W. O. Coates, coroner, stated this afternoon that there would be no need for an inquest. The body of Mr. McDonald, a Great War veteran, was taken to Sackville, where the funeral will be held.

Actual details of McDonald's death are lacking but police believe that he fell from one of the special freight which passed through Amherst during the night. McDonald had come to Amherst last night to attend the Mount Allison-Amherst hockey game and had started at the arena that it was his intention to return to Sackville after the game on a freight.

Section men got their first knowledge of the tragedy when they discovered the naked foot of a man lying in the frog of a switch near the railway gates on Victoria street. Fifty yards further along the track they found a portion of a blood-stained overcoat and a mile from this they encountered the torso of a man, with the head partially covered. Other parts of the body were found along the track. One body was picked up a short distance from the spot where the body was located.

Two friends of McDonald, named Lorette and Estabrooks, who had also been in Amherst, declared that he was not at the C.N.R. depot here when they got there, seeking to get a ride on a freight. Both young men managed to reach Sackville and on hearing of the tragedy this morning they felt it was possible that it was McDonald who had been killed.

Chief of Police Weatherbe, confirmed this fact when he examined the contents of the pockets in the man's clothes and found papers proving McDonald's identity. Chief Weatherbe, Corporal Rockwell of the R. C. M. P., and Dr. Coates investigating at the scene of the tragedy. In their opinion he had tried to catch the freight and had fallen under the wheels.
