Kipling Wanted His Breakfast.

Rudyard Kipling once visited Cecil Rhodes at Lekkerwijn, one of his farm farms at Pauri, South Africa. One morning Rhodes went round his farm before breakfast, leaving his guest, who was not so energetic, behind. This went on, and Rhodes did not appear. Hunger soon roused Kipling to action, and in a short while he was very busy on his own account. As Rhodes returned he found his trees bearing a new kind of fruit in the shape of placards inscribed in large black letters with "Famine!" "We are starving!" "Food not here." On reaching the front door he was confronted with the following, in still larger type, for the human race: Breakfast takes the mind, but sustains the body. It has sustained thousands; it will sustain you. See that you get it! Then in the house, on every available wall, he came across other mysterious placards. In more and more pathetic appeal, "Why die when a little breakfast prolongs life?" Larger and larger grew the type, "It is late; it is still later," leading at last into the little breakfast room, where he found Kipling reading his paper in peaceful innocence, but very hungry. It did not need much ingenuity to guess the author of these broadsides.

A Heroic Physician.

A deadly plague in the city of Marseille could do nothing. The doctors knew of the disease, owing to the danger surrounding any inquiry into it. In a council among themselves they came to the conclusion that the corpse of a victim must be dissected, but it would be death to the operator. Upon this being decided a celebrated physician, one of their number, arose and declared that for the safety of his country he would give himself up to the task. He then immediately left the room, made his will and arranged his affairs. At day-break on the following morning he entered the house where a man had just died of the plague. Here he made a complete examination of the body, performed the necessary operations and wrote down all he observed. When this was completed he left the house, threw the notes he had made into vinegar that they might not carry infection and retired to a lonely spot. There he died within twelve hours.

Change is Simple.

"There isn't so much doctoring with simples as there used to be."
"Oh, yes! More."
"Eh?"
"The difference is that the simples were formerly the remedies, whereas now they are the patients."

Reassuring Him.

Mr. Newcomb—I was so glad to meet your mother. I didn't think she was so—or—exceedingly stout.
Miss Wantman—Oh, yes. But I'm sure I'll never grow to be like her. I take after papa, you know.
