The Maine crop was not dug and may believe that, when the autumn comes out, Maine show an additional decrease on seed holdings and that their stock will run lighter than anticipated, or did three weeks when I was there, in Connecticut and Rhode Island I found the very satisfactory but not in a majority of cases, to that of last year. The same condition exists in Long Island and Jersey; but I find that there is greater amount of potatoes dug now from Jersey than the week the previous year and I that, when Jersey starts to a quantity of her potatoes, we will see a decided improvement. This may not develop some weeks but it is definitely that way.

Iran to abdication in favor of his son, British and Russian forces were reported on the march to occupy the capital of Iran, Teheran, and to balk German threats to the Baku Field.

Against the prizes sought by Hitler in the opening drive across the lower Dnieper, the German claim that three Russian armies have been smashed in the north is of secondary significance.

The reported battle on the new north-central front may have been a defensive rather than an offensive action for the Nazis. The size of the Russian forces (the report from Hitler headquarters placed them at more than 250,000 men) indicates a Russian counter attack, particularly since there is far better ground for Russian defensive action east and southeast of Staraya Russa.

A Nazi drive toward Moscow from the indicated scene of action does not seem probable. The Viadskaya range, the most mountainous terrain on the whole vast battle front from Leningrad to the lower Dnieper, throws a sheltering arm about Moscow from that direction. Behind that barrier on a wide front lies a lake-studded region of extreme difficulty for mechanized warfare.

Nazi defeat of a Russian counter thrust south of Lake Imen might end Leningrad's hopes of relief; but not necessarily open a route for the Germans to flank Moscow from the north. The opening of the great German drive eastward toward Rostov from the Dnieper is a far more deadly menace for the Russians.

apparently have been replaced by younger or older soldiers, leaving, therefore, 800,000 Germans still garrisoned in western Europe.

This appeared as an answer to newspaper pleas for a quick British incursion into the continent to compel the Germans to return troops and planes to the west and relieve the pressure on the Red army.

Some well-informed quarters now believe, however, that decisions by Britain and the United States to rush all possible aid to the eastern front have made immediate large-scale operations in the west a remote possibility. This belief is supported by Home Secretary Herbert Morrison's statement that Britain is retaining only enough of her arms output to insure her own safety, and sending the remainder to Russia.

Already, diversion of British planes to Russia has been accompanied by a slackening of the R. A. F.'s continental fighter offensive which, in mid-summer, sent hundreds of Spitfires daily over Northern France.

As for the United States, W. Averell Harriman, head of the American mission to Moscow, said today that shipments of United States raw materials and finished products now reaching Russia in substantial amounts would be increased despite the "great problems involved" U. S. ships, he added, were going freely across the Pacific to Vladivostok.

Six Britons were named to the British Moscow mission under Lord Beaverbrook.

Islanders in Signals Troops Reaching Britain

A BRITISH PORT, Sept. 16 (CP Cable)—Cheered by news of the Canadian Spitzbergen expedition and hoping there will be more such raids "so we can get some action too," fresh detachments of the Canadian 3rd Division arrived in Britain.

A Manitoba rifle regiment, most of whose members are Winnipeggers, and signals and ordnance troops comprised the latest recruits for the signmen are from Prince Edward Island and the ordnance personnel from all parts of Canada.

Three rousing cheers echoed across the decks and were redoubled when the Brigadier, also a native of Winnipeg, told the men they would get five days' landing leave within a few days.

The Canadians, whose ship was part of a huge convoy, had an uneventful crossing. Mar-timers included Rifleman Ivan Ivanoff of Moncton, N. B. a regimental barber who fought in Macedonia in the last war, and D. H. Wilson of Port Elgin, N. B. Sgt. D. C. ed that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Minister of Transport, the Postmaster General, the four Federal members representing Prince Edward Island and the Provincial Premier. The resolution was re-drafted several times before being finally agreed to.

Vice President V. A. Ainsworth who presided, explained that members from the Board of Trade had met with Premier Campbell several days ago and were informed that Canadian Airways and Carl Burke both had applied to Ottawa for the service but neither had been given the mail contract up until then. Further inquiry revealed that the proposed new service would consist of the same number of trips and would in addition connect with St. John, N. B. Mr. Ainsworth said that it "seemed definite" that the private company was to take over. He complained that the eight-cent rate was still in effect and there was no promise of a Sunday service. The only thing offered by the new company was the possibility of an increased number of trips in bad weather and the connection with St. John. The Premier was not in favor of the Sunday service as Today's smoke and gunfire shall die out; the present strife shall cease to exist; Communism, Nazism, and Fascism alike shall be crumbled in the dust for they are foundationless and the truly Christian Democracies with an united faith shall stand.

A thinking youth, with friendship, fellowship, understanding peace of mind, yes, even sacrifice and suffering shall be the price we are willing to pay! But herein lies our future "Today".

AGAINST "SWITCHING"

Mr. R. E. Mutch pointed out that at present the province was being served by two planes, each capable of carrying 10 passengers whereas the proposed new service would only have two five-passenger planes on the run; also one of the companies offered to run two planes each carrying only seven passengers. He considered it a mistake for the Board to agree to give a carrying capacity equal to the one now in operation "It would be a decided step downwards," he stated. One of the companies looking for the contract was not the Canadian Airways itself but a local company sponsored by Canadian Airways, he added. He charged that Saint John was behind the move as it gives them something they cannot get now from TCA. He also warned against any delay in acting about the matter and stated that the Board should object to "any further switches."

Others taking part in the discussion were Messrs E. M. Baginall, A. B. Belcher, Jack Gordon, Wallace Higgins and Dr. J. A. Clark.

The Board Secretary then read a reply from Premier Campbell
