"PEERLESS"

NETTING

The Fox Farming Industry is one of the most profitable investments, and it is of the greatest importance to Fox Ranchers that they secure a Fox Netting of the highest grade material possible. It must be such that there is no possible chance for the Foxes to escape.

PEERLESS Brand Fox Netting is all that the name implies. The best quality of Fox Netting made only for us, and sold by us all over Canada, being used exclusively by the largest owners of Foxes in the world.

PEERLESS Brand "Dead Flat" hangs flat, without bagging or sagging, and makes a perfect fence. All troubles and difficulties, such as the cutting of salvage wires, stretching and pulling, which are experienced with some brands of wire, are entirely removed. "Dead Flat" Netting lays out like a carpet, and can be erected by any amateur.

We also carry a full stock in Montreal for shipment to points West, thus giving the Western buyer a large saving in freight.

Every roll of "PEERLESS" Netting is guaranteed true to mesh and full lengths of 150 feet, heavily galvanized before and after woven—will not rust. We guarantee "PEERLESS" Brand English Fox Netting and if any rolls do not open to your satisfaction, we will gladly replace same or refund your money. In stock and to arrive, over 2000 rolls.

We also carry a complete line of Fox Pens, Staples, Lacing Wire, Nails, Hinges, Fox Tongs, Hasps, Locks, etc.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. LORNE HIGGINS
On Saturday, June 2nd, 1928, just as "the day was dying in the West," Mrs. Lorne Higgins, South Melville formerly Ethel Brown of Hunter River, passed peacefully to her eternal reward at the early age of 35 years.

The death of a christian, according to our teaching and beliefs, should not be the saddest experience of all, for the soul is called to enjoy a fuller and happier existence with "Him who loved us and gave Himself for us," but there are certain circumstances and relationships in life, which make the parting with dear ones a very sore one. Such was the case in the passing of Mrs. Higgins. The leaving of infant twin babies three days old, who shall never know the tenderness of a mother's love made the event particularly sad.

Mrs. Higgins who was the youngest daughter of the late Simon and Mrs. Brown of Hunter River, was a young woman of estimable christian character. Always active in the work of the Church and Sabbath School, none could be more faithful in attendance and helpful service. Truly, she will be greatly missed by her co-workers who so loved and esteemed her.

But it is in the home, where the grief-stricken husband, and four young children besides the infants, are left to mourn, that she will be missed most sorely, for continually they will "long for the touch of the vanished hand and the sound of the voice that is stilled." But they have the comfort—even the joy to know that she has gone to be with Him whose she was and whom she served.

The funeral was conducted on Tuesday the 5th of June at 2 o'clock by her pastor the Rev. George Sears who in the course of his address paid a very high tribute to the deceased and spoke with tenderness and sympathy to the bereaved. The funeral was very largely attended and many friends of her old home community in Hunter River, were present to pay their last tribute of respect.

There were many beautiful floral offerings not only from the immediate members of the family, but from neighbors and friends as well as from Lorne Orange Lodge and the Ladies' Orange Lodge at Hampton.

The following were the pall-bearers: Alfred Cameron, Windsor Bell, Harry MacKenzie, Sam French, William MacFarlane, and Manford Beer.

Besides the sorrowing children namely, Melville, Ivan, Emily and the infants, and her husband, she leaves to mourn her aged mother, Mrs. Simon Brown of Hunter River; the following sisters: Mrs. Eliza Jewell, Concord, N. H.; Mrs. Joe Cutcliffe, Cape Traverse; Mrs. Eldon Seaman, Hunter River, and the following brothers: James Brown, Windthorst Sask.; William, Coppens, Sask.; and Melville also of Coppens, Sask., to all of whom the Guardian joins with hosts of friends in extending the sincerest sympathy.

"Jealous Hearts"

MILDRED BARBOUR

Tony started for home in response to Millicent's wire. He sat in the train and watched the whirling landscape change from green fields, forests of palmetto, and brief glimpses of an azure sea to brown earth, sleeping under a blanket of snow, leafless trees, and a gray sky.

He was glad to get away from the Crossley house-boat party, but he was both glad and reluctant to return to the Long Island villa, where Elinor awaited him.

He had had no word from home, except Millicent's brief message that Elinor had arrived from Europe, and then the wire asking him to return. He had purposely stayed away, postponing the moment when he should see Elinor again. At least, the meeting now would be none of his contriving. He was only obeying orders.

But he knew so well how it would be. He would go to Millicent's frivolous Spanish villa, determined to be cool, courteous, brotherly. He would feel Millicent watching him, and he would wonder if she had guessed the truth. She was so worldly and sophisticated now. His lips tightened in a grim smile at this thought. As if Millicent would care, if she did guess. Then Elinor would come down the stairs to greet him; her wonderful eyes would be turned upon him; her unforgettable voice would draw: "Tony, dear!" The perfume of her hair would be in his nostrils; the years would roll away, and he would be as hopelessly infatuated as he had been in his early youth.

As the train sped steadily northward, he almost wished that he had had the courage to disregard Millicent's wire and go on to Cuba and then to South America with the Crossley party. He wanted so much to see Elinor, and, at the same time, he dreaded that first meeting.

He wondered if she had forgiven him for his criticism of her in London, four years ago. He wondered if success had spoiled her, if she would be much changed. She would be more beautiful, of course. Nothing, not even age, could dim Elinor's beauty, he thought. He wondered if she would come to meet him. Millicent probably would. He had wired her the time of his arrival. She had a provoking way of playing the dutiful wife occasionally, with such a mocking gleam in her brown eyes, that Tony wanted to shake her. He wondered what fresh audacity she had perpetrated in his absence. As a wife, she was anything but boring; he never knew what she was going to do next.

But she was not at the station. Nor was there a car to meet him. Tony was resentful; it was snowing, and the chill of the New York winter, after the warmth of the Florida sun, was unpleasant. She might, at least, have remembered to order the car, he told himself indignantly.

He took a train for Long Island. It was a local and made slow time. For the snow was becoming heavier. The frequent opening of the doors let in chill blasts, and the scent of damp clothing filled the car.

Tony became increasingly furious. He was, moreover, cold and tired and hungry. He cursed himself for not having gone to his club for dinner and the night. If Elinor and Millicent were too occupied to remember to send the car for him, they were not likely to be disturbed by his failure to appear.

When he alighted at his station, there was still no car from the villa. He telephoned, and the butler assured him hastily that the limousine would be sent immediately. No, no car had been ordered, Mrs. Deering said. A moment's hesitation, then—she was not at home.

The villa looked very cheerful, as he approached it through the swirling snow. He went directly to his own quarters, had a hot bath, dressed, and descended to the library, where he rang for Hawkins and asked if Mrs. Deering had said she would be home for dinner. It struck him that the butler looked at him curiously before answering: "No, sir, Mrs. Deering didn't say."

Tony, in a dazed sort of way

ECZEMA IN ITCHY PIMPLES

Affected Nearly All of Body. Cuticura Heals.

"Eczema broke out in pimples and affected most all my body. The pimples were not very large but were red and hard. Some of them festered and then scalded off. The pimples were so itchy and burned so much that I used to wake up in the night and scratch them. My clothing aggravated the breaking out very much.

"I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and in four weeks I was completely healed, after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment." (Signed) Frederick A. Zinck, Robinson's Corner, N. S.

Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Talcum are ideal for daily toilet uses.

Sample Each Free by Mail. Address: Cuticura Dept., P.O. Box 1024, Portland, Me.

was wondering why he was so eager for information as to Millicent's whereabouts, and why he hadn't asked whether Elinor were at home. He rang again. Better to get it over with immediately.

He asked for Elinor, and Hawkins told him that Miss Carver would be down at once.

Tony braced himself, his eyes on the door. He heard a step in the hall. His heart leaped. The door opened slowly. Elinor stood on the threshold, smiling.

She wore a gown of gold tissue, and her famous emeralds. She was regal. Hands extended, she walked toward Tony. Her eyes were no longer mocking. They had an expression that he had never seen in them—and it embarrassed him.

He found himself stammering: "Why—why, hullo, Elinor. I say, you're looking fit."

After four years of separation— that!

But Elinor, looking up at him, said thrillingly: "Tony!"

She lifted her lips to his, and to his great astonishment, kissed her as calmly as he would have kissed his sister. Then he lifted her hand and kissed her finger-tips. His eyes were puzzled.

"It's good to see you again, Elinor."

"Is it?" she asked, in that same low, thrilling voice.

He found himself saying, in a matter-of-fact way: "You—you are quite well and happy?"

"Quite," she smiled. "Quite well, and very, very happy."

"I am glad to hear that," he answered.

She laid her hand, with its gleaming emeralds, on his arm.

"Aren't you going to ask me why I came home?"

He started, flushed.

"I hope it was to see us all, after these years of absence."

"To see you, Tony," she answered.

"That's—er—very kind of you, Elinor—"

Her hand slipped down, found his, and clasped it. She sought his other hand and held it in her warm, soft, fragrant grasp.

"Don't you understand, Tony? I've come to you, at last. You've loved me all these years, and I've been a blind fool. Now I know, and I love you, Tony. Take me—I want to be yours—your wife."

PROVINCE OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND PUBLIC NOTICE

I have been credibly informed that a number of persons are at present in this Province engaged in soliciting the sale of stocks, bonds, shares, etc., in companies, corporations or syndicates which in some cases have not the confidence of reputable financial circles.

The public are therefore respectfully cautioned to make very careful inquiry from bankers and other competent sources before parting with savings in return for certificates, etc., of perhaps very doubtful value.
