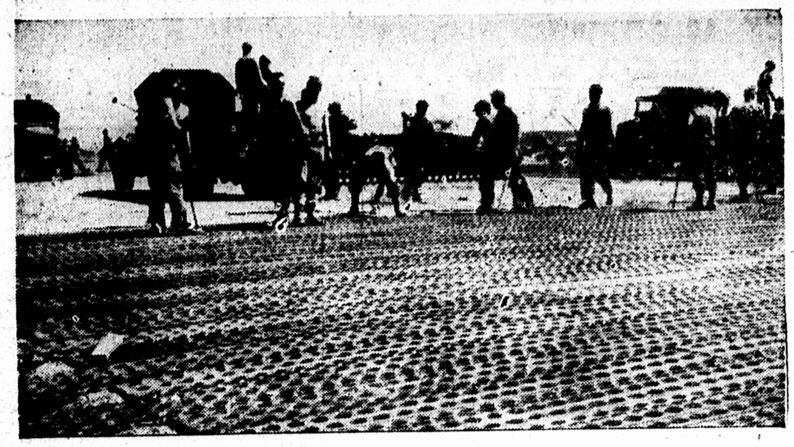
Minard's relieves sprain



Canadians and Americans are working closely together in furnishing overwhelming air superiority in Italy. The accompanying photographs illustrate the speed with which a new airstrip is put into operation. American engineers lay the interlocking metal strips which form a smooth landing surface for the fighters and bombers of the Allied air force —(R.C.A.F. Photo).

The work of American engineers laying metal landing strips for a new Allied airfield in Italy is interrupted a hundred times a day as fighter planes land and take off from the partly completed air strip. As soon as the plane passes the engineers are back on the job. This time its a Spitfire of the Canadian Squadron coming in for more fuel and ammunition.—(R.C.A.F. Photo).
