RECORDS FOR COLD PLACES.
WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—Dewitt Lake, North Dakota, with an average of nearly one fifth of the days of the year when temperatures are as low as zero, or lower, and more than one half of the days of the year when it is freezing, or lower, holds the record as the country's coldest place. Temperature conditions vary greatly in the United States during the winter season, an analysis of the records of the Weather Bureau show. Long and severe winters in the northern states, with North Dakota, Minnesota, Northern Michigan and Northern Vermont having the most severe weather contrast sharply with the mild winters of the southern states, but in summer the difference is not nearly so great.

Freezing temperatures have been recorded at all mainland stations of the Weather Bureau in winter past, but they have been of infrequent occurrence along the Pacific coast and in the immediate Gulf coast sections where they average only two to five days during the winter compared with an average of one day along the California coast.

In general freezing weather occurs more than 100 days of the year north of southern Pennsylvania, the Ohio River, and the southern part of Missouri and Kansas, as well as throughout the Mountain and Plateau districts of the West. In North Dakota, Eastern Montana and Wyoming freezing temperatures may be expected on more than half the days of the year, the annual record of Yellowstone Park averaging 211 days. This is in marked contrast with two days at Tampa, Fla., and four days at Galveston, Tex.

As a rule zero weather does not occur south of the District of Columbia, the western portion of Virginia, the extreme northern parts of Tennessee and Arkansas during the cold wave of 1899, the zero line was carried to the East Gulf coast.

The road overseers have a busy time this winter keeping the roads broken after every storm. The genial mail driver, Martin Doyle, does not make very regular trips this winter on account of the snow storms and bad roads, but he is doing very well. One day last week when he found the roads impassable for a horse, he left his horse and sleigh at Wm. McCourt's at Glyneth River and walked out through Hope River and the Center Road with the mails, but all we can say is—cheer up, Martin, spring is coming.

She was born at Rockbarra, Lot 46, in June 1823, and consequently lacked five months of completing the century mark. It was generally considered that she was several years older than this, but a reference to the records kept in St. Columba's Church, where she was baptized completed the century mark. She was a remarkably healthy woman, up to her last illness, she was a useful household worker. She leaves to mourn one son Vincent, McPhee, in the old homestead where she passed eighty years of her long life, also Mrs. Roderick McPhee, Grenada, Mrs. Angus D. GRANDER THAN NIAGARA
A traveller describes the wonders of the Victoria Falls in Rhodesia. "They are not only the grandest waterfalls," he says, "but also the most sublime spectacle in the world. To say that the River Zambezi measures more than a mile in breadth where it rushes over the precipice to drop 400 feet and to throw up columns of spray to some 2,000 feet visible fifty miles distant—this is to say nothing. "Nothing, at least, that conveys any idea of the magnitude and beauty of the falls. "Only by comparison can any idea be given of the grandeur of Zambezi's fall. Any one who has seen Niagara may compare the little notion of its unknown, untamed, unspoiled rival by imagining something nearly twice and a half as high and twice as wide. "And as this is a practical case, a comparison of the amount of water running away in each case is interesting. Niagara's horse power is 7,000,000; the Victoria Falls allow 30,000,000 horse power to run to picturesque waste around the corner. "After the planning and the work, the men with the collection plates gathered up the pennies and the choir headed the war department, writes Katherine Negley in Judge. The world turned around and around, the city moved a few blocks and times changed. "A motion picture place bought the church property. The men were the same type as the minister, the producers took care of the business end, the window cashiers gathered in the pennies and the choir of the plays objected to the changes made in their manuscript. "The city kept moving away, prices soared and times changed even more. "Now a garage is on the site. The landlord gets more press now than any star and he gets the same details, the mechanics take in the small change and the customers conduct a silent and invisible war on the prices charged. "So the scenery is merely changed and the same types are doing just about the same things.

MIDAS' GOLDEN TOUCH
King Midas, according to Ovid as a reward for giving a helping hand to a drunken comrade, received from Bacchus the power to turn into gold everything which he touched. Midas enjoyed himself immensely at first, turning twigs, apples, stones, and clots of earth into gold. But the trouble began as soon as he sat down to eat. The bread he touched turned to gold and defied his teeth. The wine flowed down his throat as liquid gold. According to an embellished version of the myth, the Midas' misfortune wrought by the King when, in a blessing's guise, his little daughter, he turned the child into a golden statue. Bacchus had been aware that the gift was anything but desirable. So, believing Midas cured of avarice, he now in the fountainhead of the River Pactolus. As a result of his bath, the sands of that river golden to this day.

Darkies Hear Drury
Hon. Howard Ferguson, the peppery leader of the Conservative party in Ontario, dearly likes to have a bit of fun at the expense of his good friend Premier Drury. When Howard was throwing verbal rocks at the Government in the course of a spirited address to the Toronto Business Men's Liberal Conservative Club the other day, he precipitated a burst of merriment by relating an alleged recent happening for which he humorously vouched. "Not long ago," said Hon. Howard Drury, "my good friend Premier Drury was getting one of his characteristic speeches off his chest at Cayuga. A couple of darkies on the edge of the crowd were much interested. "Who is de man what's 'alkin', Rastus, is de man, enquired of the other. "I dunno, Sam," was the reply, "but he mos' shorely is givin' hisself a mighty great recommendation."

Do not allow roots to be exposed to the sun, drying winds or frosts. Prune with a sharp clean cut any broken or injured roots. Have the hoes large enough to admit all the roots without cramping. Plant in fine loam, enriched with thoroughly decomposed manure. Do not allow any green, unfermented manure to come in contact with roots. Spread out the roots in their natural position and work fine loam among them, making it firm and compact. Remove all broken branches and cut back at least one-half of the previous year's growth of wood. If the season lacks the usual rainfall, water thoroughly twice a week after-Culture-Keep soil in a good degree of fertility. Mulching the trees in autumn with manure is beneficial.

HONEYMOON ISLAND
Norfolk Island, in the Pacific Ocean, has, through romantic superstition, earned for itself the nickname of "Honeymoon Island." It is believed that if the first month of married life is spent there, the couple concerned will enjoy long life, health, wealth and happiness. Without this legend it would be an ideal place for a honeymoon. It has been called the most beautiful spot on earth. This earthly paradise started its career as a convict station. The history of those early days is a tale of horror. Ruins of the famous "solent cells" are still to be seen. These cells, made of concrete, four feet thick, were just large enough to enable a man to stand up or lie down. On the walls can be seen the prayers carved by convicts. Known as "the tombstones" the silent cells provided the worst form of punishment, and those confined in them rarely came out save.

TRAINING STRONGHEART
THE DOG HERO OF THE MOVIES
It took five months of day and night training on Mr. Trimble's part to get him to the point of working before the camera, unlearning what he had been taught to do as a police dog in Germany, and later as a Red Cross dog in the Great War. Mr. Trimble had to teach him that this was a new game, and it was quite right for him to do things when he was just acting, that he had impressed upon him he must not do in his earlier life. Can you imagine a dog having the ability to learn that in acting he must attack a man and appear to have lost his head in a blind fury, make out that he hated the man, pretend to kill him, and at the same time never ever actually lose his head or hurt the man? He had to learn that the things the villain in the story did to him or to the person he'd be expected to protect, weren't actually meant. Yet if you see one of his pictures you'll see for yourself that he attacks a man, seems to have gone mad with rage, appears to have torn him to bits, and left him dead.

HOUSEWORK NEED NOT RUIN THE HANDS
One seldom meets a housewife nowadays who is ashamed to show hands that show signs and stains of toil. But for all that the housewife should give some thought to the care of her hands. Sometimes women who do all their own work, washing and scrubbing included, have hands in better condition than other housewives who merely give a little help to maids and cleaning women who do all the heavy work. It is largely a matter of the way they work. Although the texture and quality of the skin has something to do with it, in general hands that are fairly plump withstand the effects of housework better than those that lack fat. A little fat seems to work wonders in preserving the whiteness and texture of the skin. Most fatal to any hands, however, is the habit of exposing them to very cold air when they are wet. Hence, it is most important to get into the habit of drying the hands thoroughly after washing dishes, scrubbing or washing clothes. It is important, too, to have a pair of gloves to slip on when taking clothes from the line or putting them on the line. Very large washable gloves of the sort that masons wear are desirable as they may be kept clean, which is desirable when using them to handle clothes. Though not very warm they afford the protection needed to keep the hands from chapping.

IS IT ANYBODY'S BUSINESS
Is it anybody's business if a gentleman should choose to call upon a lady— If the lady doesn't refuse? Or, to speak a little plainer, Is that the meaning all may know Is it anybody's business If a lady has a beau? Is it anybody's business When that gentleman does call Or when he leaves the lady? Or is it necessary That the curtain should be drawn To save from further trouble From outside looker-on Is it anybody's business— But the lady—if her beau Rides out with other ladies And doesn't let her know Is it anybody's business— But the gentleman—if she should accept another's escort Where he doesn't chance to be? If a person's on the sidewalk Whether great or whether small Is it anybody's business To save from further trouble Where that person means to call And if you see a person, As he's calling anywhere Is it anybody's business What his business may be there The substance of our query Simply stated would be this Is it anybody's business What another's business is Or if it is or if it isn't We would really like to know For we're certain, if it isn't There are some who make it so. If it is, we'll job the rabble And act the noble part. Of the tattlers and defamers Who through the public mart If they'll, we'll act the teacher. 'Tis each modder learns 'twould be better in the future If he'd mind his own concerns

ARMED AND THE MEN
"I see you have your arm in a sling," said the inquisitive passenger. "Broken, is it?" "Yes, sir," responded the other passenger. "Meet with an accident?" "No. Broke it while I was trying to pat myself on the back." "Great Scott! What for?" "For minding my own business." "I see. Never could happen to me, could it?" "No." "And if it did I wouldn't be blame fool enough to tell it." Then there was silence in the car.

THE CHANGE OF A NAME
How family names change in the course of many years is illustrated by the conversion of "Boteville" to "Thynne." An English deed bearing date in the closing days of the fifteenth century shows three brothers then flourishing—John Boteville of Boteville and Thomas and William Boteville. The trio are distinguished from all other Botevilles by the explanation "of the (line), or family residence, the title to which had come to their joint possession. John's grandson was known as Ralph Boteville-of-the-line, from which the transition to Ralph Thynne is easy. His descendants have been Thynnes ever since.

THE TREE PLANTER
I saw a woman, bent and gray,
Planting trees by the bleak high-way.
And seeds of grasses and seeds of flowers
She scattered there through the hours.
She looked so fragile and old and worn
That, touched with pity, I spoke to her.
"Why toil, kind mother, the live-long day,
Planting trees by the bleak high-way?"
You have earned a home and an easy chair
In place of toiling and sweating there."
She answered, "I love the work, my son
And rest comes sweet when the day is done."
"Why plant the flowers on the high-way's hem?"
She smiled, "The children will gather them."
"But the trees you're planting you'll pass away
E'er they cast a shade by the bleak high-way."
"It matters little that I should die,
I can but plant them," she made reply.
"I love to dream that the birds will swing
On the topmost branches and gladly sing
And happy children will gather here
To play 'neath my trees from year to year;
Then, perchance a pilgrim will pass some day
And find a shade by the bleak high-way."
