Night Policeman Warns Mothers of Danger of Letting Daughters Run Loose — Is a Boy or Girl Friend on the Side a Remedy for Boredom in Marriage?

Dear Miss Dix—I am a night policeman in a town of about 4000 population and therefore see more of the doings of the younger people than the average person. Within a year there have been more than twenty-five forced marriages in this little town that were bound to result in misery because the young men had neither work nor money. I see every night young girls from 12 to 15 years old out on the streets, or out joyriding with boys until as late as 12 or 1 o'clock. This includes most of the girls in the town of the above ages. Is it possible that their mothers have no interest in them? Our county Judge says: "When a mother allows her girls aged from 12 to 16 to run around this way of nights unprotected the mother should be spanked, and spanked hard."

Perhaps you can say something to these mothers to wake them up.

Answer:

Your Judge is too merciful. Something worse than spanking should be done to the mothers who let their little, silly, ignorant young girls run on the loose. It would take something with boiling oil in it, as they used to say in the Gilbert and Sullivan opera, to make the punishment fit the crime.

But most of these mothers do get that punishment. They get it in the shame that comes to their daughters and in the knowledge of their wrecked lives. Lives that were wrecked before they even began to live. Lives that were wrecked through ignorance and because mothers failed to do their duty. That is the pity of it. The tragedy is so senseless, so unnecessary.

When a little young girl goes wrong, it is her mother's fault. It was because her mother was so careless and indifferent that she never took the trouble to inculcate good principles in her.

She never taught her to be modest. She never taught her to hold her honor above her life. She never taught her how to protect herself against herself and that her greatest foe and the one she must always be upon her guard against was herself. She never taught her that her own impulses and her desire to be loved and petted and admired by men would be an ever-present danger against which she must protect herself, and that as long as she was mistress of herself she need fear no man.

The mother is to blame when a little young girl strays off the straight and narrow path, because it was her business to protect her against the pitfalls that lie along the road of life. She knows its perils. She knows the places where the precipices are steepest. She knows where the hair-pin turns are that it takes wisdom to negotiate safely. She knows where a girl is likely to skid over the brink unless she puts on the brakes. And if she has failed to keep her little girl from joyriding down this dangerous road before she even knows how to drive, the disaster that is bound to happen is on her own soul.

The mother is to blame if she fails to control her daughter and keep her doing the things that she knows she should not do. There isn't a woman in the world so ignorant that she does not know that the period of adolescence is the most dangerous time in a girl's whole life, the time when she most needs a mother's hand upon her and a mother's wisdom to guide her. There is not a woman who does not know that at that time of her life every girl is boy mad, that she is intoxicated with her first awakening womanhood and that she can attract the opposite sex and that through sheer ignorance she will do things and take risks that the most hardened woman of the world will do. There is not a woman who is not perfectly aware that no girl between 12 and 17 is capable of taking care of herself. It would be impossible for her to have the knowledge and experience to do so.

And, knowing these things, how any mother can let her little adolescent daughter run the streets at night with boys and go off with them in automobiles, passes all comprehension, and it passes all comprehension how they can stultify themselves into believing that their daughters are different from other peoples' daughters and that the terrible things that have happened to other girls are not going to happen to theirs.

Of course, the mothers will say in their own defense that they can't keep their children from doing what other people's children do, and that as long as Mamie Smith and Sadie Jones and Jenny Brown parade the streets at night and go joyriding with boys they have to let their Annies and Lulus and Floras do the same. Well, then, why don't the mothers get together and organize a girls' protective union and keep all of the girls at home and see that they receive their boy friends there at proper hours and in a decent way? After all, the mothers of the country hold the real power in their hands and could rule their children if they had backbone enough to assert themselves and fight it out with headstrong youngsters.

When God sends a woman a girl baby He puts the greatest responsibility on earth into her hands, and woe to her if she falls in her obligation. For it is the mother's hand that molds the child's character. It is the mother who makes the girl what she is and is answerable for the way she turns out.

Dear Miss Dix—What do you think of a married man having a girl friend and a married woman having a boy friend? One tires of another's company if one has it all the time. No man wants to come home and listen to the same line of conversation night after night, nor does any woman want to listen to her husband's old stories over and over again. I think there would be more happy marriages if married couples had friends on the outside with whom they spent one evening a week. A good idea would be for two couples to co-operate in such a manner that

RICE AND PORK CHOPS

Sear six lean pork chops on both sides, then place them in a deep casserole. Sprinkle over them six tablespoons of raw rice, one large onion, sliced, one can of tomatoes and one chopped green pepper, one-eighth teaspoon of black pepper and three teaspoons salt. Add enough hot water to cover. Place cover on casserole and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for one hour, or until rice is tender. Serve in the casserole. This will make a good basis for a one-dish summer meal.

WORDS STUMP TEACHERS

CHILLI, O., July 5.—(U.P.)—Two five-foot blacksmokes rudely disrupted an outdoor church service which was being conducted here recently. The reptiles slid over the boughts of a tree under which the congregation was seated and into the first row of worshippers.

There would be no jealousy. When I marry I propose to adopt this plan.
FRANKIE.

Answer:
If you do, I think you had better get a marriage license with a divorce coupon attached because, human nature being what it is, I fear your plan would not work out. I can't see a wife watching her husband give himself an extra close shave and doling himself up in his evening clothes to take his girl friend out when he never bothers to dress up when he is going to take his wife out, without her getting green-eyed and looking at him a little slantwise and having a few suspicions.

Nor can I imagine a husband being pleased at noting how pepped up and enthusiastic his wife is and how she hurries through dinner to put on her prettiest frock and put perfume behind her ears when she is going out with her boy friend and being able to put any real enthusiasm in his voice when he says he is sure to have a good time with Bob and not to hurry home.

For you see, Frankie, the trouble with platonic friendships is that they don't stay platonic, and the minute a man and woman began thinking of some other woman and man as a relief from matrimony and as some one who infused interest in life—somebody who represented their good times—the fat would be in the fire of that marriage. The husband and wife would unconsciously fall in love with their sweeties.

Of course, there are husbands and wives who bore each other, but this need not be the case if they have even ordinary intelligence and take the slightest trouble to be interesting to each other. As a matter of fact, they should be the most interesting people in the world to each other and often are, because they have so many mutual interests. I know plenty of husbands and wives who have been married thirty and forty years who haven't begun to talk out.

All the same, I agree with you that husbands and wives should keep

Sleeves may fling a mean bell bottom from the looks of the early fall clothes. There's a whiff of the old times in the new dress sleeve silhouette with a suggestion of the bell in the over-sleeve and a softly wrinkled under-cuff tight about the wrist done in another fabric. The under-sleeve very often may match the collar or scarf fabric. A regular leg o' mutton sleeve is somehow getting a little mossy now anyway, and this new double sleeve idea smartly replaces it.

In wraps, the sleeve stylings are set-in versions achieving bulk below the elbow, while for coats the contour is simpler, with stress laid on fabric manipulation as frequently as upon the mode of fur trimming. Elbow cuffs or deep cuffs terminating at the elbow are marked trends.

A Morning Smile

A Scotchman landed at the Royal York just recently and after dinner wandered down the rotunda. Noticing a rather pompous looking, well dressed gentleman, smoking a big fat cigar and looking quite at peace with the world, he spoke to him. "Hoot mon, and who might you be?"

The American gentleman looked him over and replied as follows: "I come from the wealthiest, most influential and most wonderful country in the world."

The Scotchman looked at him a minute and then answered. "Weel, weel, it didna tak' you long to forget your accent."
