Millions Too Weak To Work In Russia

LONDON, Aug. 23.—The efforts of employed workers in Russia to help the famine sufferers are hindered by the fact that they themselves are weakened through lack of proper food, says a Moscow despatch to the Daily Herald.

The famine now is paralyzing strong and weak alike, it adds, and many men for whom employment is available are too enfeebled to do anything requiring physical exertion. It is estimated by the Herald's Moscow correspondent that workers in the suburbs of the larger towns are receiving only thirty per cent. of allotted rations.

A Company of White Performers

A rumor is apparently being circulated that "The Guy Brothers Minstrels (who play the Prince Edward Theatre Thursday and Friday of this week) is a company of colored performers." This is not correct. The manager has attended performances of the Guy Brothers Minstrels in days gone bye, the performers were white, and always have been.

A well known Charlottetown lady attended the performance of Guy Brothers Minstrels at Amherst last week, and informed Mr. Gallagher this morning, "it was one of the best shows she had ever attended," and this young lady attends all performances given at the Prince Edward, as well as Boston and other cities during her holidays.

Local theatre goers will have an opportunity to see for themselves before Thursday night's performance as the Guy Brothers Minstrels will parade the principal streets Thursday noon. These parades are one of the features of all minstrel organizations.

The reports from all towns and cities in the Maritime Provinces, where the Guy Brothers Minstrels have played, are excellent, "turn away business in every town."

CORNS ON THE HORSES FEET

What is a cure for corns on the feet of horses? A. S.

Treatment for corns on a horse is to remove the shoe, pare the sole well down so that if there be any pus it will escape; if not the sore and inflamed parts will be exposed. Then apply poultices of hot linseed meal for two or three days to allay the inflammation. The wall of the foot at the quarter should now be rasped down so that no weight will rest upon the shoe above the seat of morn, and a bar shoe giving frog pressure put on. If pus be present it is well to plug the hole in the sole with tar and tow before the shoe is put on, in order that gravel or other foreign matter connat enter the opening The shoe should be removed and re-set every three or four weeks. This may effect a cure for a time, but there is always a tendency for the re-appearance of the corns. Some have used a rubber padding under the shoe with good effect.

A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

....Chapter III

John Aldrich could not of course express it verbally, but the fact that he had heard Marcia express her opinion of people who had families, of women who gave up all their good times to care for troublesome children, seemed almost monstrous to him. He had supposed all women wanted children some time.

Many of John's ideas were turning topsy-turvy. Yet he was a bit old-fashioned and clung tenaciously to some of them, albeit he seldom aired them or contradicted Marcia.

Many times Marcia complained of being lonely.

"It is deadly dull here alone all day! If we lived further down town I could go out more."

"We have outdoors here just as generously," John replied with a smile.

"I didn't mean just going out doors! I meant that I could go to the shops—see things!"

"That would mean more expense, Marcia, to say nothing of the greater temptation you would have to spend money if you were often in the shops. No, dear. We will have to be contented where we are for the present. You have your friends and your home to look after. I don't see why you should be lonely." He did not add what was in his mind—that if she would care for the apartment and dismiss the maid she would not find time hanging so heavily upon her hands. He had learned to be discreet in his suggestions.

"I have joined an afternoon bridge club,' Marcia told her husband gleefully. "I shall have to take some lessons or I shall lose my shoes. The women play a wonderful game."

"You can't afford to play for big stakes, Marcia. Better pull out if they do."

"If I choose to use my allowance for that instead of clothes and pay my own debts if I lose, I don't see that it makes any difference to you. You always spoil everything for me. I suppose you would like to take away my allowance so I couldn't play."

"No, dear. But your allowance won't go far if you gamble."

"Who thought or said anything about gambling! Just a social game of cards for small stakes isn't gambling."

"You like pretty clothes, and I also enjoy seeing you well dressed. At present I cannot make your allowance any larger. If you lose you will have to wear your old clothes."

"Always say something disagreeable! It makes me feel so happy. Suppose I win, then I can have better clothes."

John Aldrich sighed. One couldn't argue with Marcia. If he tried, she grew angry and made him so uncomfortable. The next day she began her bridge lessons. She already played a fairly good game. She had played in a social way for years, and so in a month her teacher flattered her by saying she didn't need him longer.

"Watche me show the rest of them I can play bridge!" she remarked to John before he left in the morning of the day the club was to meet. "I'll probably shall be late getting home. They play right up to dinner time."

At 7.30 Marcia came in flushed, excited. John greeted her pleasantly, although he had been home an hour, and dinner has been ready since 7.

"Well, how did you come out?" John asked, trying to show an interest because he knew it was expected.

"Just as I told you I would! I showed them I knew how to play bridge." Gleefully she tossed a roll of bills across to him. Count them!"

"Thirty two dollars."

"You have forgotten the change. Thirty two fifty. What do you think of that? I'll soon have enough to pay for my lessons, then I'll be on velvet."

"I have a theory about cards. Marcia, about gambling of all kinds. I don't believe any one can afford to win any more than they can afford to lose. How often could you afford to lose $32.50.

"For throwing cold water on anything you beat any one I ever saw, John Aldrich! Most men would be proud of a wife who did things I believe all you think a woman is good for is to keep house for some man!"

Della just then announced din-

Neither Too Tight Nor Too Loose

Inspection Every Thousand Miles Is Very Desirable

FRONT WHEEL BEARINGS are too often neglected. How long since yours have been inspected? Better jack up the front end and take a look at them, as to adjustment and lubrication, before starting on that projected trip. These bearings should be perfectly free, but not loose enough so that there is noticeable shake at the wheel. If they are too tight they grind out and if they are too loose they pound out. The unbalanced weight of the valve stem should be sufficient to cause the wheel to turn. Do not mistake looseness in the steering-knuckle for looseness in the wheel bearing and set the latter up too tight, in an attempt to remove "shake" from the wheel. The chances are that you will have to tighten the bearings a little, by turning up on the axle nut a trifle. Probably the bearings ought to be removed and cleaned in gasoline. In repacking them, don't use that hard "cheesy" yellow grease, which doesn't distribute, but use "dope" of vaseline consistency, and clean all old grease out of the hub space and off the spindle, replacing it with fresh. For Heaven's sake, be sure that the axle-nuts are securely locked, for life and limb depends upon this. That little cotter-pin separates you from eternity.

ANOTHER STEAMING RADIATOR

Mrs. J. B. writes: My car boils its water after running three miles, although I have had it at the garage and they report that pump, fan and circulation are all right. Will this boiling do any harm, and how can it be prevented?

Answer: Boiling of the water, in itself, is not necessarily harmful, although it may prevent the engine from giving its best results, but the danger is that the water may so far boil away that circulation will stop, and then overheating and serious damage to the engine may result. We believe the garage people overlooked something and that the circulation is not right. If the rubber connections are old, you better have them renewed and if the radiator has not been cleaned out for some time, you better have this done with washing soda solution or lye. Be sure that your brakes are not dragging, check up the spark timing to insure that it is not too late and use as lean a gasoline mixture as you can. If you can readily spin the fan by hand, when the engine is stopped, the belt is not tight enough.

STARTER GEARS LOCK

M. N. writes: When I press my starter button, the engine is not turned over and when I try cranking it by hand, I cannot do so, as it is locked. The only way to loosen it up is to rock the car violently, when in gear, or to remove the starter motor. I have just put on a new flywheel and have had the starter off several times. What is the matter?

Answer: We believe that it is a case of faulty meshing of the pinion and flywheel gear, due to incorrect positioning of the starting motor. Possibly your new flywheel gear is not exactly like the old one or the motor is not lined up with it. When you apply the starter, the pinion goes into mesh, but the motor has not power enough to turn the engine over, perhaps because the pinion and gear teeth bottom or otherwise operate with too much resistance. As the demeshing of the pinion depends upon the speed of the flywheel gear exceeding that of the pinion and the flywheel does not start at all, there is nothing to separate the two gears and they remain locked. Starter must be adjusted as to position, so that a perfectly free gear mesh is secured.

LIGHTS DIRECT FROM GENERATOR

H. F. writes: I have installed a magneto on my car, and as I do not use the starter, am using the battery for lights only. Can I remove the battery and use the generator for lights direct or shall I need a resistance of some kind?

Answer: You might try the following, but we don't know what results it will give you. Disconnect one side of the generator field circuit and bring it out to a switch on the cowl, wiring from the other side of this switch back to the connection from which the field wire was removed. When this switch is open the generator will be dead and when it is closed, it should excite itself. Leave all lights switched on at all times and, when you want them to burn, close the field switch. You can fasten the relay-contacts closed, if you wish. You may find that your generator regulates close enough to give you fairly good lights or can be made to do so by altering the third-brush position. Never run the generator excited unless all lights are on.

Questions of general interest to the motorist will be answered by Mr. Clough in this column, space permitting. If an immediate answer is desired, enclose self-addressed, stamped envelope.

ner was getting cold, so John was saved the necessity of replying But all through the unpalatable dinner Marcia talked of the party, the wonderful spread the hostess had given them, etc.

"No wonder you can't eat if you had all those good things," John said, as he helped himself to a chilly potato. "It must have cost her something with food at the price it is."

"There's a kitty, you know," eagerly. "And it must almost pay for the food."

John Aldrich frowned into silence. A kitty, too. His wife was really gambling.

Tobacco "War."

Now that the tobacco war is over in Toronto, the scene of hostilities seems to have shifted to Essex and Kent where the Methodist preachers are not allowed to smoke or criticize the crop which is the staple moneymaker among their rural parishioners. The object of the offensive this time is the tobacco hornworm and chemical warfare is being indulged in by the farmers with the hope of utterly exterminating the enemy. Whether prayers are being offered up in the churches for the successes of the rural arms has not yet been reported.

That the most severe outbreak of hornworms to which the famed Ontario tobacco plant has ever been subjected is now on, is reported in a bulletin from the Dominion Government's specialist. Three pounds of powdered arsenate of lead must be applied to each acre. The enemy's lines must be sprayed completely. There is to be no quarter.

A big total loss to the growers and a corresponding scarcity and dearness of "chewing" is feared, unless prompt measures are taken.

Millers Worm Powders not only make the infantile system untenable for worms, but by their action on the stomach, liver and bowels they correct such troubles as lack of appetite, billiousness and other internal disorders that the worms create. Children thrive upon them and no matter in what condition their worm infected stomach may be in, they will show improvement as soon as the treatment begins.

PLEASANT FUNCTION

On Friday evening, August 19, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Trainor of Windon entertained in their spacious home about two hundred invited guests in honor of their son, Alphonsus, who leaves shortly for his home in Boston. The time was enjoyably spent in music and dancing, music having been furnished by our noted violin specialist Mr. Ward Crane, assisted by some of our local talent. A special feature of the evening was a step dance by Miss Agnes McCarthy and Mr. Tom Trainor. A sumptuous supper was served in Mrs. Trainor's best style, after which dancing was again resumed and continued until the "'we sma" hours of the morning, for, as "Tom" is a jolly good fellow, every body enjoyed themselves and all departed for their homes feeling convinced that Mr. Trainor is "the right man in the right place."

HORSE SWEATS

We have a horse six yeors old, and would like to get him fat. He eats all right, and has plenty of timothy hay and oats. He is afraid of trains and not of autos. When he works he sweats. L. T.

The horse suffers from chronic indigestion. Let him run out when not at work and at such times have no grain. Have his teeth put in order. Give him an ounce of Fowler's solution of arsenic night and morning until he is in good condition. Then discontinue the medicine gradually, taking 10 days or more to the process. You could break him from fear of trains by pasturing him a month or two in a field close to the railroad tracks.
