had hated everything in men but their minds. Six was not only dead but a detestable memory. After that rejuvenescence she had never cast a thought to loving any man again. That mental habit, at least, was fixed. When I met her she was a walking intellect.

And God only knew what the man had said to her. Should he let her fight it out by herself? What in heaven's name should he do? Whatever happened, this divine interval, life some exquisite adjusted musical instrument.

Clavering, still too nervous to sit down, jerked out the whole story, omitting only the old love affair with the man who had exercised so strong an influence on Mary Zattiany's early life.

The Middle Ground

By Marion Rubincam

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters. Any Talbot had been overworked for so many years that she had gotten completely out of touch with life and new ideas. She finds this out when her son Luther returns to the farm with his newly married wife Claire, and when Jane, her daughter, comes with her new ideas and finds them making Amy, the youngest, disconcerted. Claire and Luther quarrel, Claire goes back to the city, taking Amy with her. Eventually Jane and Luther go away.

Only Luther slept peacefully that night. Luther had his own depressing problem, but he had lived with it for more than a year now, and in that time, anyone can learn to sleep and worry too.

NOTICE

To the electors of the City of Charlottetown.

I intend to nominate as a candidate for Mayor at the civic election to be held this year on the 12th of February.

With a record of twelve years your representative in different branches of the civic government, six years as City Councillor and six years as Commissioner of Sewers and Water Supply, I feel that I am justified in seeking for a term of highest civic office in the city.

Should you vote the honor of electing me I shall endeavor to do so in the future, as I have done in the past to respect the confidence placed in me and to give my support in a moderate policy of improvement to all civic departments.
