ELLEN'S DIARY

By an Island Farmer's Wife

Contrary to James' expectations, we did not finish the threshing this morning, neither was I able to follow my usual schedule with regard to my Saturday's cleaning. But James and I spent a delightful morning in after years. I shall not likely be able to remember anything about housework done at home. I shall recall happily, I know, our slow progress towards the mailbox. James' dog Mitt was very companion on that trip—perhaps not altogether our companion but instead, our care. He who at his small master's wish is quickly changed into several other kinds of animal was at this time a fat cow being led off to market. I was long rope, a carless member of the staff had left in the vicinity of the porch, suggested that we should put down various letters and put down various letters and put down various letters.

Dorothy Dix Says—

DOTING UNJUST TO DAUGHTER Mothers Who Pamper Girls Make Later Life Hard For Darlings

One of the saddest things in the world is that the almost frantic obsession of so many mothers to make their daughters' lives easier than their own have, causes them to do the very things that make life harder for their petted darlings.

For these mothers do not try to fit their Mamies and Susies for whatever fate has in store for them. On the contrary, they do everything possible to untill them to fight their battle with circumstances, and this gives us the hordes of whining, complaining, neurotic women who just can't take it when they are called upon to meet the inevitable hardships of life.

EFFECTIVE PROCESS OF SPOILING This desire for what mothers believe to be their daughters' happiness is the alibi they offer for spoiling their girls rotten. "I never had any pretty clothes when I was a girl, and I am determined that Sally shall have them," says Mother, as she puts on her patched shoes and buys Sally her forty-seventh pair of fancy slippers. "I always had to eat plain food and I am not going to let Angelina ruin her hands with dish water," says another mother. "I am not going to burden my daughters with work and responsibilities when they are young," say other mothers who slave over the cook stove, while their young girls play golf for exercise.

So we have the girls who are reared to be utterly selfish and self-centered and lazy because they have never been taught to think of anybody but themselves, or to do any kind of work, or to consider anything but their own pleasure and convenience. And if these girls' mothers had been their worst enemies, instead of their most devoted slaves, they could not have committed a greater crime against them. Inasmuch as the average mother is an intelligent human being, it is strange that she so seldom tries to prepare her daughters for life. She knows that they are in all probability destined to lead. She knows, for instance, that the car give her daughter no drive and that Sally will most likely marry a poor young man on a small salary, but Mother doesn't bring her up to pinch pennies and shop at the bargain counters. From her infancy up she cultivates crepe de chine tastes in Sally that turn her into a bitter, frustrated woman when she finds she cannot gratify them.

Mothers know that the odds are a thousand to one that their daughters will have to do their own housework after they marry, yet the number of mothers who teach their girls how to cook is negligible. They say: "Oh, Sally will learn how to cook when she has to do it. I did." And they neglect to add that by the time they had learned how to make bread that was fit for human consumption and to run a house on a budget, they had wrecked their husbands' digestions and soured their dispositions and had a million quarrels, and that most of his salary had gone into the garbage can. Yet mother knows that the most important accomplishment that any bride can possess is to be handy with the pots and pans, and the surest guarantee that her marriage is going to have the old story book ending, "and they lived happily ever afterwards."

And, above all, mothers don't teach their daughters how to get along with their husbands. They let their girls go into marriage thinking that their husbands are going to baby them as Mother has always done, and when they find out that they are expected to act like reasonable human beings, they rush to the divorce courts. Life is hard for women, but mothers make it harder for their daughters by not fitting them for it.

HOUSEHOLD SCRAPBOOK

By Roberta Lee A Clean Stove After frying any food that splatters grease over the top of the range, wipe it off immediately with an old newspaper. It will keep the range clean and also prevent any odour from the burning food. Shoes Shoes should be polished regularly. It will remove the dirt before it has worked into the leather and caused any damage. Sharpening Stone The sharpening stone will always give good work if it is washed after each using. HINTS ON ETIQUETTE Combing your hair over a wash bowl and leaving the combings in the bowl is a disgusting habit, especially for the next person to use the bowl. EXTRA SHOE LACES Keep a supply of extra shoe laces on hand, just as you would extra button clasps, etc. It is a major catastrophe when during or shortly after your shoe laces during the rush of morning dressing and there is not a pair to be found in the house.

Store Head Dreams of Vision of Coming Year

NEW YORK, Sept. 20—About five years from now, if you happen to be strolling down Fifth Avenue without looking anywhere in particular and suddenly see a bright new aeroplane swoop down over your head and alight on the roof of a glass-constructed department store just ahead of you, most of us at all surprised says a staff correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

Streamlined Shopping Because it is exactly how Walter Hoving, imaginative head of Lord & Taylor department store, is planning your shopping future in this city. And you might just as well get accustomed to the idea right now, because by the time designers get through with their plans for the streamlined New York, probably not even Mayor Foreello La Guardia will be able to recognize it.

Evidently coming to the conclusion that it is going to take some bold designing to keep pace with the atomic age, architects here are outdoing each other in innovations designed to make doing business and visiting here never-to-be forgotten experiences or entirely new reasons. The new zest has spread to some unexpected quarters, too, including museums and even the New York Public Library, which is not usually caught in a playful mood.

On Fifth Avenue For some reason that is not yet clear, most of this imaginative action is planned for upper Fifth Avenue, which certainly should offer food for thought to some people around the city who made grim predictions some years ago that a city New York was on the way out, and Fifth Avenue an all-around deserted thoroughfare. The new plans are showing up now, the fashion nucleus of the world has plenty of vigour for the post-war world, and the fun is just beginning.

No one has announced whether or not shopping in the ultra-modern department store will be any easier for men, especially during the Christmas rush. We just assume that it will be. But even with such major considerations set aside, it is still a distinct challenge to the imagination.

For, just as a starter at the Lord & Taylor store, which will occupy the entire block on the west side of Fifth Avenue between 52nd and 53rd streets, there will be no parking difficulties at all, according to the way plans are being made.

Easy Shopping All you have to do is bring down your helicopter, or whatever kind of plane you will own by then, and land it on the roof-top of the store. Or, if you remain the conservative type, you can drive over to the store in your car and park it in the subterranean parking space.

But even then your fun will just be beginning. By the time having the door open for you automatically by radar will be a routine occurrence. The elevator, too, will be a thing to watch. What might surprise you, though, may be the absence of staircases. No longer will you have to make that difficult decision between waiting for a crowded elevator or climbing the stairs. Instead, you will be able to take the stairs straight down, and you will be able to take the stairs straight up, and you will be able to take the stairs straight across, and you will be able to take the stairs straight around, and you will be able to take the stairs straight through, and you will be able to take the stairs straight over, and you will be able to take the stairs straight under, and
