"My husband was troubled with indigestion, after meals, and could get nothing to do him any good until he took B.B.B."

"Follow her!" the Doctor commanded Mallory. "I'll see about the trains." I was at his elbow when he spoke to the clerk. That functionary was gazing after the girl with wide, terrified eyes.

"In Heaven's name!" he said, "what is she? A woman or a beast?" The doctor did not answer. He ignored the question utterly.

"When is the next train for Oak Ridge due?" he asked.

The ticket clerk rubbed his hands over his eyes. "Did you see her?" he asked. "That creature that just went through the door?"

I did not wonder that he was horrified. I remembered my own feeling when I had seen her start down the corridor toward Wilkins' room.

The doctor paid no attention, and in the same level voice in which he had spoken before, he repeated his question about the train for Oak Ridge.

With an effort, the clerk rallied his wits and answered him.

"There was a train pulled out about ten minutes ago," he said. "There won't be another tonight. The wires are down on account of the sleet, and we've practically abandoned the suburban service. It's too dangerous. Everything has to run without orders."

"Did you hear that Ashton?" said the doctor, turning away. "The last train to Oak Ridge that will run tonight left ten minutes ago."

CHAPTER X

Ashton had followed Mallory part way across the waiting room, a little nervous, I think, at the idea of jettisoning the girl out of his sight. So he had not heard what the clerk had just told Doctor McAlister through the ticket window.

"Well," he said, "that, is all right, isn't it? We don't want to go to Oak Ridge. If the train Wilkins took started only ten minutes ago, there's ample time to arrange to have him arrested before he sets foot on the platform at Oak Ridge. Where's the telegraph office in this station?"

"It won't do you any good," said Doctor McAlister. "There will be no telegraphic communication with Oak Ridge tonight."

Ashton glanced thoughtfully about the room. "That possibility hadn't occurred to me," he said at last.

"It occurred to Wilkins," said the doctor. "That's why he went. He's the one man of us who really grasped the situation. He knew just what that sleet storm meant—that over a territory fifteen or twenty miles square electricity was going out of the business of serving civilization for a few hours. That one vital fact turns the world topsy-turvy, and makes some difficult things impossible. For just tonight, our thoughts can't move any quicker than our bodies can. So Wilkins has set out for Oak Ridge, and we can't head him off. The only thing we can do is to follow him. The question is, shall we try to do that?"

I followed Ashton's glance just then and saw Mallory coming back with the girl. She seemed unconscious of his presence, and made straight across the room to where the doctor was standing in conversation with us. She halted beside him without a word her manner perfectly quiet, though expectant. She was merely waiting for without suffering. I lost weight and was so run down I'd have to stay home from work for as long as three days on a stretch. The results I got from Sargon were wonderful. I'm eating regular meals without a trace of indigestion; the headaches and dizzy spells I used to have are gone and I'm on the job every day feeling great.

him to tell her what he wanted done next.

For the moment he paid no attention to her, did not even glance sideways at her as she came up.

"That's the question," he repeated to the attorney. "Shall we try to go out to Oak Ridge tonight? You spoke of having two men on watch there all the time. Can you safely leave the matter of coping with Wilkins to them?"

Ashton walked away a few paces, then whirled and came back. His look was troubled, disquieted.

"I wish you were there, Mallory," he said. "Green and Benson aren't any too wide awake. They'll have a man to deal with who has just outwitted us."

"These are two courses of action open to us," said the doctor. "One is, to go home and go to bed. The other is, to get out to Oak Ridge tonight. Our getting there at all is problematical with the roads in the present condition."

Ashton whirled round and spoke to Mallory. "Go and telephone to the nearest garage for an automobile; quick!" he said. Then, addressing us, he went on: "There is no necessity for your going, Doctor Mc Alister, or Mr. Phelps, either. But Mallory and I can't afford to waste a minute."

"You've wasted one already," said the doctor, "telling Mallory to go into that telephone booth."

Ashton, heartily cursing his own stupidity, darted off after his messenger.

"I think I'll go along with them," said I to the doctor, "just on the chance of my being of some service."

He laughed. "Are you thinking you'll leave me behind? Come, Phelps, you know me better than that. No, we'll all go."

His gesture included the strange, silent, expectant figure that had been standing at his elbow all the time.

"Do you mean to take her?" I questioned.

"She's brought us so far. She's given us, up to this point, every material fact that has made it possible for us to establish Haines' identity and get on his trail."

"It just happened then that my eyes were on the girl. I saw her shiver—saw a look of human intelligence and perplexity appear for the first time in that strange face of hers. I tried, with a nod to direct my chief's attention to her, but before he could get my meaning Ashton came hurrying back."

"There's a garage only two or three blocks away," he said, "and Mallory ought to be back with a car in a very few minutes."

Then he held out his hand to the doctor, "I can't begin to tell you," said he, "how grateful I am for the help you've given us, not for your patience with my unenlightenment."

"No valedictories now," said the doctor interrupting. "You're not going to be rid of us easily. We're all going with you."

"Good!" said Ashton. I hoped you would, though I felt I hadn't any right to ask it of you. Come! There's the motor. Let's lose no time."

My memory of the next two hours is one of unrelieved discomfort and constantly increasing apprehension. We skidded across street car tracks and had a dozen of what in normal times we should have called narrow escapes, in the first dozen minutes. After that we stopped counting. The excitement of the chase was mounting in our veins.

How To Get Relief From Catarrh

If you have catarrh, catarrhal deafness, or head noises, go to your druggist and get 1 oz. of Parmit (Double Strength) take this home, add to it 1/2 pint of hot water and a little sugar. Take a tablespoonful four times a day. This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Clogging nostrils should open, breathing become easy and the mucous stop dropping into the throat. It is easy to make (tastes pleasant and costs little). Every one who has catarrh should give this treatment a trial. You will probably find it is just what you need.
