By international machinery which whirls unceasingly, with Geneva as its pivot there has been established a vast clearing house of usefull intelligence on a great variety of international problems whose range is constantly increasing. Government foreign organizations and individuals in many lands are constantly writing to the secretariat requesting information on a thousand and one matters which touch the whole gamut of human activity.

Special agents of the League are constantly in the field pursuing special investigations. Professor Zinsser for example of Harvard University is now making exhaustive inquiries into health conditions in Russia. Dr. Nansen has recently submitted a report on work accomplished by the High Commissariat of the League for Russian relief.

Many People Wonder

why it is that glasses are worn more commonly in the present generation than in the past. Some say that the race is deteriorating, some that is for style, but the real reason is that our modern civilization requires the eye to do more work than was even the case before.

Consequently, the eyes, if in the least defective, may give you a lot of trouble, though in reality they are no worse than those of your grandfather who did not wear glasses till he was an old man.

If you feel the least symptom of eyestrain, remember that it is natures warning to you and consult us at once.

Spain Is Worried Over Its Princes

HENDAYE, France— on the SPanish Border — (By mail to United Press).— Will Spain become a republic some day because of shortage of kings?

This is a question about which the people in Spain dare, talk,that fewer dare believe, and that the newspapers avoid for several reasons, such as lack of information, censorship, etc.

However, the truth is that, although the present King of Spain is not ill, his first son, the Infante Alfonso, Prince of the Austries and heir to the throne was born in Madrid on May 10, 1907, is in very poor health and may not live as long as his father.

The news has leaked out, little by little. It is known that the Prince is suffering from malady of the spine, which prevents him from walking, except with a crutch under each arm, his body almost bent double.

A pathetic incident occured recently, when the royal family decided to leave Madrid to go to the north of Spain, where it has summer residences on the seaside, at San Sebastian and Santander. Prince Alfonso was in condition to make the trip by railroad, but what would the crowds say and think when they see him, crippled; he, their future king? How embarrasing it would be for him and others attending the official ceremonies in places where the train stops. On the other hand, it was so terribly hot in Madrid that he could not stay there, and his parents would not leave him alone. Wherefore the King decided to take his son to Santander, which is about four hundred miles northwest of Madrid by automobile.

One morning at 5 o'clock a huge torpedo car left the royal palace. It was driven by the King himself, and carried the Prince, a doctor and the chauffeur. After dashing through the towns of Castille and Navarre, the car reached the Miramar palace of Santander at noon. Prince Alfonso, almost covered with blankets, had passed unnoticed everywhere in the clouds of dust The King came back to Madrid the next day, and a week later returned Santander with the rest of his family.

Of course, what the Spanish said about the trip to Santander was that the King went with the Prince.

The situation would not be critical if the other sons of the royal family were in better health, but it is known too they are not well. The second, Don Jaime, who is now 15, stammers and sufferes from hereditary deafness, for which he receives care from an American doctor.

Don Juan Carlos, 10 years old, although his condition is not as serious as the other two, is weak and does not grow properly for his age

It is easy then to understand the anxiety in official circles on account of the health of the possible successors to the throne, especially should King Alfonso not survive long. It is not surprising, either, that those who know the inside are wondering what will be the outcome and what further difficulties may arise when Spain loses its present ruler.

The rush of Palestine Jews to the United States continues, according to the London Daily Mails' Jerusalem correspondent.

Secret Of His Success

One of the most noted, successful and richest men of this country in a recent article said, "Whatever I am and whatever success I have attained in this world I owe it all to my wife. From the day I first knew her she has been an inspiration and the greatest helpmate of my life." Health is the first essential of every woman who wants to be a successful wife to hold the love and admiration of her husband. If a woman finds her energies flagging and dark circles appearing under her eyes, she has backache, headaches, nervousness and "the blues," she should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, the medicine which holds the record of helping 98 out of every 100 women who try it. There is nothing better.

Naughty Children Are Discussed By Physicians

(By Dominion News Service)

PORTSMOUTH Aug. 23.—Eminent doctors analysed the Naughty Child at the British Medical Association conference which met here. Many seriously declared that most children revelled in naughtiness for the sheer pleasure of reducing their parents to a state of nervous prostration.

Dr. H. Cameron, one of the greatest authorities on children whose book "The Nervous Child" attracted much attention a short time ago related how a distressed mother brought her ten-year-old girl to him becouse she "seemed to be horribly interested in deaths murder and anything associated with blood."

"The child," he said, "was left in my waiting-room while the mother tafked to me in my surgery. When we went to the waiting-room to see her we found that this charming little girl, all smiles and dimples had selected a book on skin diseases from the bookcase.

"There she stood with it upen at a page illustrating a particularly unpleasent case. Her mother turned pale and threw up her hands in horror.

"Then the child at once closed the book and a smile of utter satisfaction spread over her. She had achieved her object which was simply to make her mother shiver.

"This is a typical instance," added Dr. Cameron, "of the reason for what may be described as nursery disturbance. Children inclined to be naughty and perverse indulged in all kinds of antics, simply because it turns the lime-light on them."

This story drew another from Dr. Henry Duveen, a physician. He recalled that one of his twins so starter him once that he quite forgot he was a doctor and became simply an alarmed father.

"One evening," he said, "when in my consulting room, I heard my wife calling frantically to me. I rushed upstairs and found her on the verge of fainting. One of the twins was lying on the floor in the bathroom and his face was black.

"I wanted him to bath,' said my wife, 'but he wanted to play with his Teddy bear. I took the Teddy bear from him and he fell over on the floor, and—well you see what he is like."

"For the moment," continued the doctor, "I forgot everything about doctoring but before I could recover myself the little chap was on his feet again playing happily with the Teddy bear.

"A few weeks later his nurse returned from a holiday. She wanted him to bath; he wanted to play with the Teddy bear. Nurse was adamant, and the next moment he was on the floor black in the face as before. Nurse simply went on bathing the other twin and in a moment or two the one on the floor had recovered miraculously.

"This," added Dr. Duveen amid laughter, "is a confession I feel bound to make after listening to Dr Cameron, because it illustrates that children resort to these alarming antics chiefly to upset their parents.

Dr. Helen Boyle told a story which she said rather disgusted her when she heard it but which she thought illustrated the object of the naughty child.

"A golden-haired boy of six annoyed his parents very much by his habit of spitting. As a punishment they used to put him in a cupboard. On one occasion he was undergoing this punishment when his mother knocked at the door and said: 'John are you a good boy now?'

"There came back an angry little voice: 'I have spitted on your best dress and I have spitted on your new hat, and now I am waiting for more spits."

Dr. Cameron had described how he had found that most children suffering from nervous disorders, had a peculiar stance as if their bodies were weighed down by fatigue. He said: "There is a kind of cowering curve in their backs."

Dr. Helen Boyle remarked that she wondered whether these stances were acquired from parents during the last few years. "I pertainly have noticed," she added "That most women during the war and since seem to have acquired stances extraordinarily like that described by Dr. Cameron."

The doctors eventually arrived at the conclusion that every doctor who was called in to treat a child should do so only through the mother.

"It is absolutely necessary," said Dr. Cameron, "to study the mother very closely before attempting to deal with any nervous disorder from which a child may be suffering.

"It is true that the conduct of many mothers is responsible for the behaviour of their children which is often mistaken for nervous disorder but which is sheer naughtiness; nevertheless the mother even if she imagines she has lost all control over her child can become the greatest influence for the child's good if her wonderful powers are directed in the right way."

Ten Millions Disabled By World War

GENEVA, Aug. 23.—That at least ten million combatants were disabled during the great war, is disclosed by the statistics issued by the International Labor Office, regarding the number of people in the principal belligerent countries now receiving disablement pensions. The figures are:

Germany	1,537,000
France	1,500,000
Great Britain	1,170,000
Italy	800,000
Russia	775,000
Poland	320,000
Jugo-Slavia	164,000
Austria	164,000
Gugo-Slavia	164,000
United States	157,000
Belgium	110,000
Rumania	100,000
Canada	45,000
New Zealand	20,000
Australia	16,000
Finland	10,000

This totals 7,124,000, but no official statistics are available from Turkey, Bulgaria, the Baltic States, Portugal, Hungary and Japan. There is ample evidence, however, says the bureau, that to put the total of disabled men in the world war at ten millions, would not be an over-statement.

PLEADS FOR CAUTION

Manchester, England, Aug. 23—Addressing the members of the West Birmingham Unionist Association last night, Austen Chamberlain declared "the Entente is hanging by a thread and any clumsy handling of the reparations questions at this moment may snap that thread, and undo the work of the last twelve or fifteen years." He characterized the Government's latest note to France as inconsistent, illogical, and futile, and pleaded for caution in a situation which he said was fraught with peril for Great Britain, the Allies, Europe and the world.

"Germany is almost at the brink of disaster and threatened with revolution." Mr. Chamberlain added.

"She is in peril of starvation because of the reckless finance in which she indulged. The Entente is in jeopardy, and I plead for caution and foresight in saying it."

Flint Cone Points Scientists Back To The First Americans

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 23. (United Press.)—A real "cave-man" may have lived in prehistoric times in America, according to recent discoveries by a Smithsonian Institute investigator in Missouri.

Most everyone knows that, before the Indians, there were the mound-builders. But lack of any evidence of a real "primitive man" such as the Neanderthalers of the Cro-Magnons of Europe, has led geologists to believe that the Americas may be a newer continent.

Gerald Fowke, anthropologist, working under the direction of the Smithsonian Institute, however, has just returned from Stratman Cave, on the Gasconade River, in Maries County, with a flint cone from which arrowheads had evidently been chipped, in a stratum many feet below the strata which carry evidences of the earliest Indians.

In the layer above the rock stratum in which the cone was found, Fowke found remains of what are thought to have been Indians, but of a more primitive type than any now known. The jaws were "prognathous," that is, the jaws protruded far forward from the head.

No other evidences of human activity were found in the stratum with the more ancient cone. Fowke said that examination by the ethnology experts of the Smithsonian had brought the statement that the cone, of "chert," a quartz-like stone had undoubtedly been worked by humans. The chipping was quite regular.

"Nothing quite like it has ever been found at such a depth in this region, and the experts say it is doubtful if anything like it has been found in America," Fowke said.

There are hundreds of caves along the Gasconade in the Czarks, and Fowke has made excavations in many of them in recent years, in search of evidences of "the first American."

Seeks Famous Gem From Ex-Empress

GENEVA, Aug. 23. (United Press)—Rome messages indicate that the Italian government will try to prevent ex-Empress Zita disposing of the famous diamond known as the "Florentine," which formerly adorned the family jewel chest of the Hapsburgs.

The stone was pledged, with other jewels, by the ex-Emperor Karl, to a Swiss bank, to finance his last ill-fated dash for the Austrian throne, but as Zita needs money urgently, she is understood to be selling her rights of redemption of these jewels.

The "Florentine" is one of the world's most famous diamonds and weighs 139½ carats. It is valued today at 30,000,000 Italian lire. Its early history is tragic. Four and a half centuries ago a peasant, looting the dead outside the walls of Nacy (France) during the siege of that city by Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, discovered the jewel on the finger of a body which had been half eaten by wolves. The body was that of the Bold Burgundian.

The peasant sold the ring to a Jew for a few silver coins, and through various channels, and at ever increasing prices, the "Florentine" found its way to the coffers of the famous Borgia family. Thence in the course of years, and by methods which have always been regarded as of doubtful legality, it reached the Hapsburgs.

At the downfall of the Austro-Hungarian empire, the Italian government claimed the "Florentine" among its share of the Austrian crown jewels handed over under the Versailles treaty, but the Emperor Karl had other views and took it with him when he left Austria hurriedly. Karl used it to raise money, but the Italian government never admitted the legality of his possession of the jewel, and now that Zita is reported to be selling it, the Rome authorities are taking action to prevent the sale.

Five Millon Pounds For London Port

(By Dominion News Service)

LONDON, Aug. 23.—Over £5,000,000 is to be spent in the course of the next five years on schemes of reconstruction and extension of the Port of London.

Chief amongst these is the making of an entirely new dock at Tilbury and the buliding of a passenger landing stage.

"This work will shortly be put in hand," said Lord Devonport, chairman of the Port of London Authority, in a statement to the Press at the Port Authority's headquarters.

"When completed, I venture to say that no port in the kingdom will be so well equipped."

Hunt for trouble and sooner or later you will find where it landed—on your neck.

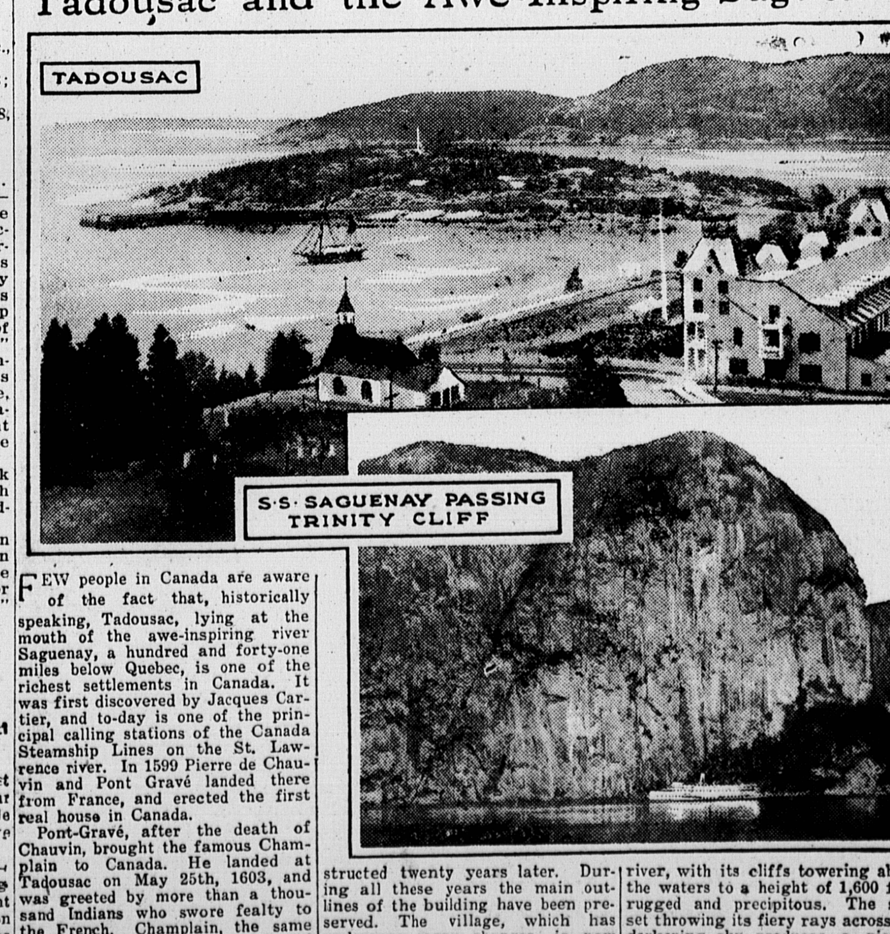
Tadousac and the Awe-Inspiring Saguenay



TADOUSAC

S·S· SAGUENAY PASSING TRINITY CLIFF

FEW people in Canada are aware of the fact that, historically speaking, Tadousac, lying at the mouth of the awe-inspiring river Saguenay, a hundred and forty-one miles below Quebec, is one of the richest settlements in Canada. It was first discovered by Jacques Cartier, and to-day is one of the principal calling stations of the Canada Steamship Lines on the St. Lawrence river. In 1599 Pierre de Chauvin and Pont Gravé landed there from France, and erected the first real house in Canada.

Pont-Gravé, after the death of Chauvin, brought the famous Champlain to Canada. He landed at Tadousac on May 25th, 1603, and was greeted by more than a thousand Indians who swore fealty to the French. Champlain, the same year, explored the new world-famed Saguenay, described recently by Sir Hall Caine, M.P., as the "Wonderland of the World." The Recollet Fathers landed here in 1615, and established the first mission in this country. Not only is Tadousac renowned for the first house, the first mission, but also for the first church ever built in the Dominion, which forms the picturesque centre of the photograph. It is said to be the oldest place of worship in America.

The village was destroyed by Kirke in 1628, and the church constructed twenty years later. During all these years the main outlines of the building have been preserved. The village, which has undergone many changes, is now one of the principal watering places on the lower St. Lawrence, and boasts of a magnificent hotel, built on the most modern lines, commanding an indescribable river view. Trout and land-locked salmon abound plentifully in nearby lakes.

But the Saguenay! The most wonderful river in the world! Cut through the mountains by glacial action, with its waters more than 700 feet in depth, is not only awesome, but has a magnificent grandeur which is common to no other river, with its cliffs towering above the waters to a height of 1,600 feet, rugged and precipitous. The sunset throwing its fiery rays across the darkening sky produces a picture which no artist can emulate and no pen can describe. To realize its real grandeur one has to see it. Darkness overshadows us on approaching Cape Trinity and Cape Eternity, and it would seem that we are in a huge dungeon from which there can be no escape. The gigantic cliffs tower over us like grim sentinels. It is as if we were entering the winding labyrinth of some subterranean acropolis, the stream itself "the river of death." Such is the Saguenay.
