THE SENATE'S POSITION.

We do not hear so much of late about Senate reform since the rapid growth of the Liberal element in that House, and the early prospect of party strength there being equalised by the filling of vacancies. We notice that the Toronto Globe has recently referred to the matter in connection with the Cook charges, but it is to be observed that whether the members of the Senate are appointed as they now are, or whether they are to be hereafter elected, the Senate would continue to exercise the right to investigate such matters as the charges made by Herman Cook. The principle is basic to our parliamentary institutions that Parliament shall judge in matters that affect its independence and its honor.

The Globe declares the principle of an appointed Senate to be "bad in any case," and seems to wonder why it was adopted in framing the Canadian constitution. A very little thought would have shown that the appointive system is a British one, and as old as parliamentary institutions. The members of the House of Lords, excepting those who succeed their fathers in that body, are appointed. The members of the Upper Houses of Colonial Legislatures have been from time immemorial in nine cases out of ten appointed by the Crown. In a few cases only, as in Upper Canada before Confederation and in this Island for a time, the Legislative Council was elective, but the general rule in British countries has been to have the Upper Houses composed of appointed members.

If Senators are not to be appointed by the Crown as at present, one or other of several plans must be adopted. One is to abolish the Senate altogether. This is contrary to the example of all free countries having representative institutions, in all of which the supreme Parliament is composed of two Houses. Local Legislatures of one Chamber are comparatively common, but the rule of two Chambers is, we believe, invariable for the higher Parliaments. Another plan would be to have the Senators chosen by the Legislatures of the Provinces. This plan The Globe condemns, and says, very truly that it would be simply transferring so much patronage from the Federal to the Provincial Governments.

The Globe apparently does not favor electing the Senators, but argues that that body is of very doubtful utility and might be dispensed with. This is not a practicable proposal. The smaller Provinces, which have a relatively larger representation in the Senate than in the Commons will not be likely to consent to abolition. Although it has been but seldom that the Senate has proved of special value in protecting the interests of the smaller Provinces hitherto, still the time may come when it may be of great use in that way. It is yet too soon for us to throw away a provision of the constitution which was specially designed to be a protection for the weaker Provinces against the rapacity of the strong.

The present method of appointing Senators is not perhaps an ideal one and successive Governments have not always made the best selections. But even in that class of appointments of which most complaint has been made there are compensating advantages. We refer to the appointment to the Senate of men who have been defeated in elections for the Commons. This was a common cause of complaint by the Liberals when they were in Opposition. Now they are doing the same thing, and not without good reason, and the late Government had equally good reason for doing this. Take the case of a member who has been several times elected to the Commons and at length is defeated. He has long held the popular confidence; he has proved a useful legislator, perhaps, and he has acquired a knowledge of public questions and of the requirements of the country together with a fund of Parliamentary experience, all of which fit him for a position in the Senate. Moreover, although open to the taunt of having been "rejected by the people" he may still have the confidence of more people in his riding than 99 out of a thousand of those who have never contested an election and consequently never were defeated.

Besides, these are times when the representation of minorities is claimed to be a sound principle in representative Government. At present the only form in which minorities secure representation at all is by the appointment to the Senate of defeated candidates. We conclude that it may be well to go slowly in the matter of reforming the Senate. It will at least be well to await the working of the elective system in Australia before reverting to that form in Canada. Theories are all very well in their way but experience often shows defects in a system which in theory appears very plausible. We are glad to see the strength of parties in the Senate approaching a state of equilibrium. We hope to see that body becoming increasingly independent and useful. We have had frequent occasion to differ from the action of its majority, but have never yet reached the conclusion that the Senate ought to be abolished.

The door that Dante saw had this inscription over it: "Despair of hope, all ye who enter here." When man despairs of hope he drains the very dregs of despair.

There are certain forms of disease to which medical science and popular superstition have given the title of "Hopeless." That very fact handicaps the sufferers from such diseases by robbing them of the courage to try to regain health. This is particularly true of lung diseases. As soon as disease fastens on the lungs, the victim sinks down, makes his will, and awaits his fate. He wouldn't act that way if he were bitten by a tarantula or a rattlesnake. He'd fight then for his life. But he is under the influence of the ignorant and superstitious, that write "Despair of hope" over the door of such diseases as by neglect or unskillful treatment may end fatally in consumption.

There is a new inscription for that doorway of disease, made by rubbing out the first two words and leaving it: "Hope all ye who enter here." What! Can there be hope for the sufferer with the constant cough, flushed face, burdened breathing and emaciated body? The record says "yes." Ninety-eight out of every hundred cases in which Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has been used have been permanently cured. "Golden Medical Discovery" positively cures weak lungs, bronchitis, obstinate lingering cough, bleeding of the lungs and kindred ailments, which, if neglected, find a fatal ending in consumption. It contains no alcohol, whisky or other stimulant.

"Your medicine is the best I have ever taken," writes Mrs. Jennie Dingman of Vanburen, Kankakee Co., Mich. "Last spring I had a bad cough that got so bad I had to be in bed all the time. My husband thought I had consumption. He wanted me to get a doctor, but I told him if it was consumption they could not help me. We thought we would try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and before I had taken one bottle the cough stopped and I have since had no signs of its returning."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are the best for the bowels. Use them with the "Discovery."
