IN MEMORIAM

JAMES P. DUFFY

After an illness of three weeks there peacefully passed to rest at his home 340 Elston Street on February 28th, a highly esteemed resident of Charlottetown in the person of James P. Duffy.

The deceased gentleman, had known an unusually beneficial and comparatively long span of life having already celebrated his 88th birthday.

He was born at Fort Augustus, where he followed successfully the occupation of farming. In 1906 he sold his property there and purchased a small farm at East Royalty where he continued the same line of work during the following twenty four years. About ten years ago he retired from farming and moved to the city where he built a comfortable home and enjoyed much happiness in his declining years. His greatest pleasure was found in attending Mass daily and the cultivation of his garden. He was a faithful member of the Catholic Church and in politics an ardent Conservative.

His wife nee Catherine Hughes predeceased him about fifteen years ago. He leaves to mourn a familiy of three viz: Sister Mary Estelle of the Convent of Mercy Lebanon, N. H. who had the privilege of being with him at his death, John J. of the P. O. Department and Mrs. Margaret Sheehan at home and who nursed him during his illness.

He is survived by two sisters Mrs. Sarah Aylward and Mrs. Teresa McAulay of Lynn, Mass.

During his illness and death he was faithfully attended by Rev. Louis Dougan who administered the last Sacraments of Holy Mother Church.

His funeral which was well attended took place on Saturday morning March 2nd at 10 o'clock to St. Dunstan's Basilica, where High Mass of Requiem was celebrated by Rev. Father Dougan, who also performed the services at the grave. Present in the Sanctuary were His Excellency Rt. Rev. J. A. O'Sullivan, Bishop of Charlottetown and Rev. Father Ellsworth S. D. U.

The pall bearers were:—Messrs. Crawford Jay, Augustus Brothers, Harold Jordan, Cornelius Corrigan, Lester Gillespie and John F. Duffy.

May his soul rest in peace.

Navy Beau

By Joseph Lewis Chadwick

CHAPTER XVII

All the next day, Phil stayed at the Navy base, waiting to hear how Dave's court martial turned out. He hadn't much hope that the ensign would get off lightly, for the charge against him was serious, but he felt more or less sure that, no matter how things went, Dave wouldn't resign. He believed he had shamed him out of that.

Late in the day, he learned the outcome. Dave had pleaded guilty and the court had ruled that he be placed at the foot of the ensigns' list, to remain there until he had lost 100 numbers. It was not as severe a punishment as it might have been, and Phil was relieved.

His relief, however, was short-lived. He met Eric Lawrence and learned that Dave had carried out his threat. He had resigned.

Phil was dismayed. 'So he did it? I thought I had talked him out of it."

Lawrence said bitterly, "He sent his resignation in as soon as the court martial was over."

"What are his plans now?" asked Phil.

"He's going back to the States as soon as he can. Beyond that, he doesn't know."

Phil sighed. "Well, I suppose he knew what he was doing."

But he didn't suppose that at all. Dave hadn't known what he was doing — he had been befogged by his emotions. Despair had obscured his outlook ever since Joyce had broken with him.

Phil's bitterness toward her increased. He felt he could never forgive her for what she had done to Dave. Well, anyway, he told himself, there was one thing gained—this definitely killed the love for her that had persisted in lingering in his heart. At last, he had "got over" Joyce Hammond.

Because of his frame of mind, he was particularly glad, a week later, to hear that Lanya Corey was on her way to Hawaii. He received a radiogram from her.

Arriving Friday Eastern Star. Hope you can meet me. Lanya.

He did meet her—was at the foot of the gangplank when she descended from the liner — and he thought she had never looked loveller.

"Aloha, Lanya!"

"Aloha, Phil!"

"Is your father with you?"

"Yes, but he seems to have forgotten we've docked. He's talking business with a man he met aboard ship. We needn't wait for him.

A flower woman came by with an armful of multi-colored leis, and Phil bought one for Lanya. He slipped it over her head and smiled at her.

"I'm very happy you've come," he told her. "I hope you're going to make a long visit."

"Only a week now. We're going to Manila, but later, we'll be here for some time. At least, I intend to stay, whether Father does or not."

"Until you grow bored?"

"Are you going to let me be bored?"

"Have I ever?"

She met his eyes. "You know the answer to that, Phil. You're the one person who never bores me."

He tucked his hand under her arm." Good! It's mutual!"

They went to the hotel where she and her father were to stay, and sat on the lanai and had cocktails. Their table looked out over the water. Just off Diamond Head, a gray battle cruiser was putting out to sea against the brilliant late afternoon sun.

Ashore, coco palms waved in the trade breeze. On the beach just below the lanai, a trio of natives strummed guitars and sang The Song of the Island.

Phil relaxed. It was nice to be there with Lanya.

"When you come back," he said, "we must plan to see a lot of each other."

She arched her brows. "Don't tell me you're fancy free at the moment. Are there no attractive girls in Hawaii?"

"I haven't noticed."
