little while, will keep you from wrecking your lives.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: My mother and father accuse me of being ashamed of them because I object to their sitting in the living room whenever I have company. It isn't that at all, because I love my parents and am proud of them, but don't you think that a girl should have a little privacy when she entertains her boy friends?

SALLY

ANSWER: I certainly do, and I don't think any girl's family is giving her a square deal unless they provide her with some place where she can receive her beaux out of earshot of her curious relatives, and safe from the maraudings of little brother and sister.

It isn't that the young people if left alone would do or say anything wrong. It is just that the presence of their elders cramps their style. They want to be silly and giggle and laugh, and they can't do that with the family gallery all about.

The parents who are not willing to give up the living room to Sally may well reflect that they are doing all they can to make her an old maid, for no youth is going to pay a return call on a girl when he has to spend the evening in the bosom of her family.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I am engaged to a wonderful girl. We would be so happy except for my mother, who never leaves us alone a minute that she can help. She has three other sons, but she concentrates on me and clings to me like a leech.

Now I love my mother dearly, but I would like to be able to go out with my fiancee alone, without Mother always tagging along. My girl friend says that she is fed up with Mom's company, but what can I do to shake Mother? I don't want to hurt her feelings.

A SON

ANSWER: The only thing you can do is to have a very frank talk with your mother and tell her that she is ruining your life. Tell her that you want to be alone with your sweetheart. Ask her if she doesn't remember her own courting days when three was a crowd?

There is no more insoluble problem in the world than the mother who is a spiritual parasite on her children.

LEGENDS OF

pigs playing near the entrance of a large, hollow log. When he drew near to the spot the youngsters took fright and disappeared within the hollow tree.

Then he got a second surprise and a bigger one, for from the other end of the log emerged a pair of red foxes that scampered off through the woods.

That afternoon John Pethick and his neighbor, Ben Shoults, returned to the woods, armed with guns, axes and saws.

When they neared the scene of the hollow log the men took off their coats and, creeping softly on their hands and knees, each tied his coat firmly over his end of the log.

The surprise attack foiled even the inmates, for from within came a series of barks and squeals as the trapped prisoners rushed against each other in a vain effort to escape.

The men next set to work to saw the log in the center. When about halfway through the cut they removed the saw, and with their axes chipped out an opening large enough to permit the prisoners to come out one at a time.

Then they lay down quietly by the tree, each holding a bag.

Seconds passed without anything happening. Then out popped a fox. Shoults shot the animal before it had covered a hundred yards. Then followed the ten pigs, each being instantly caught and dropped into the waiting bag when only halfway to freedom.

The log was now split in two, but the second fox was not at home.

Shoults and Pethick secreted themselves behind trees and waited. In about half an hour the object of their search came into view and was dispatched on the spot.

Both foxes bore evidence of having suckled the family of pigs, the strangest case of foster-mothership ever to have come to the attention of the early settlers.

The next story: "The Haunted House."

Ellen's Diary

saw the swallows touch the water leisurely with light wings. It was pleasant for those who could sit idly enjoying it, but what of the farmers up in the field at the hoeing? But from the window it seemed as though Summer held everything in its quiet magic. When all at once we saw a sow and a following of piglets turn in at the old mill-road—familiar figures out of bounds from the pasture to the rear of the piggery. What should we do?

There was only one choice. For often we had heard James recount sad tales of pigs' wanderings. "Once let them get going," James had said with an ominous nod, "and you might never find them!" And besides there was the danger of some being crushed beneath passing cars.

What a time we had easing the procession back slowly and patiently as far as the "gang-way" bridge, where it came to an abrupt halt! It was indeed a question of whether or not "the old woman was going to be able to get home to cook her old man's supper!" One false move, and the game would commence all over again. "Are you having trouble with your pigs?" a booted and creeled angler down stream called. "Oh no!" I replied blithely. "Pigs are ornery creatures, aren't they?" he asked with interest. "Sometimes!" I said, "but she'll take them along just now!" She continued to sniff about the far side of the bridge but showed no inclination of setting a foot thereon. Until through the alders a musical call rang out, in a well known voice. "Oink! Oink!" she responded, eagerly, then led the way briskly towards home . . . and James.

"Well, considering the bad roads, Ellen", James looks up from his paper to remark, "we were lucky to get those hogs off today!"

Until tomorrow . . . Diary . . . Good-night. . . .

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. Maria Buchanan who passed away April 3rd, 1945.

The one we loved has gone to rest.
Her fond true heart in stilled,
The hand that always helped us
Now lies in death's cold chill.

Today recalls sad memories
Of a dear Mother gone to rest
And the one that thinks of her today
Is the one who loved her best.

Always Remembered by Her Family.

IN MEMORIAM

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our little boy Aubrey Smith, who died April 5th, 1947.

Near shady wall a rose once grew
Shedding its sweetness day and night
It came to a crevice in the wall
Through which it saw a beam of light.

Onward it crept with added strength,
With never a thought of fear or pride,
It followed the light through the crevices length,
And unfolded itself on the other side.

Lovingly Remembered by His Parents, Brothers and Sister.
