A Hunting Dialogue.

"Do you know of a dead sure way to start a good fire with your last match?" asked a sportsman of his guide.

"Not a dead sure way exactly," answered the guide. "But I know a way that I'd be willing to count on."

"No, but a dead sure way," persisted the sportsman, "a dead sure way to start a fire with your last match."

"Well," inquired the guide, frowning, "what is a dead sure way to start a fire with your last match? That's what I'd like to know."

"Why, let me see—why, you put some powder on a dry piece of birch bark and start it that way."

"But suppose you ain't got any birch bark nor any powder. How'd you start that fire with your last match?" demanded the guide, now grown angry.

"Say, what would I be doing starting a fire?" countered the sportsman.

"What would I be starting a fire for? Just tell me that, will you? What does a man pay a guide $3 a day for?"

"What for? Why, to take along plenty of matches. Who'd expect anybody but a man from the city to go rambling around in the bush with only one match?"

And after the dust had settled it was found that the bag containing the expedition's supply of matches had been lost somewhere on the last portage—Forest and Stream.

Joy in a Tramp's Life.

I have never emphasized sufficiently the tramp's disgust at having "to do time" in June. From May till November is his natural roving time, his box car vacation. In winter, jail, even the workhouse, is often more of a boon than otherwise. However, even thirty summer days, precious as they are on the "outside," pass away sooner than one at first expects them to, and then comes that glorious moment—thunder, lightning, not even a pouring rain can mar it—when the freed one is again his own master. There may be other experiences in life more ecstatic than this one, but I would willingly trade them all temporarily for that first gasp in the open air, and that unfettered tread on the ground, which the discharged prisoner enjoys.—Joshua Plynt in Success Magazine.

A Muddy Day in London.

It has been calculated that the cost of a muddy day in London is something like $25,000. This is not surprising, says Tit-Bits, when one remembers that no fewer than thirty-two tons of mud are carried about from place to place on the wheels of carts and carriages and horses' hoofs. After a wet day the dry mud brushed from people's clothing amounts to fifteen tons, and a very similar amount is shaken out of the door mats. City mud, however, has its good points. The shoeblack increases his earnings in the muddy weather, and new silk hats and dresses and boots and shoes are clean and all the direct outcome of its destructive qualities.

Language of Umbrellas.

There is a language of umbrellas as of flowers. In instance, place your umbrella in a corner and it will often indicate that it will change owners. To open it quickly in the street means that somebody's eye is going to be in danger. To shut it quickly signifies that a hat or two will probably be knocked off. An umbrella carried over a woman, the man getting nothing but the drippings of the rain, signifies courtship. When a man has the umbrella and the woman the drippings it indicates marriage. To swing your umbrella over your shoulder signifies "I am making a nuisance of myself." To put an alpaca umbrella by the side of a silk one signifies "Exchange is no robbery." To lend an umbrella indicates "I am a fool." To return an umbrella means—well, never mind what it means. Nobody ever does that.—Spare Moments.

Funny Rebellions.

A rebellion in China, as a rule, is a comparatively harmless affair, says the Times of India. The people inform the governor that his exactions are in excess of custom and that he must reduce them. If he agrees the matter ends. If not, there is a demonstration and perhaps some shooting, but this is only preliminary to a compromise, for the Peking government never backs up its officials when force has to be resorted to, and the people have far too much respect for authority to push any successes to extremes. The troops boast of the numbers of the enemy they have killed, but the fighting does not often amount to very much. A typical story is told of the town of Tientsin, which shall be nameless who claimed to have put down a rebellion but explained when pressed for particulars that it had not been necessary to fight since by happy inspiration he had shaken out a tiger skin, which had so frightened the insurgents that they had all run away.

HILLSBORO Skating Rink

The tendency to-day seems to be toward low prices for any form of entertainment, a striking illustration of which we have had with us for some months past, in the various moving picture shows and the crowds attending them.

To meet this demand the Directors of the Hill-borough Rink have concluded that the time has arrived to give the people a winter of cheap skating and the motto for this winter is

"Full Value For Your Money"

The Rink will be open every afternoon (weather permitting) from 2 until 5:30 o'clock and any lady, gentlemen or child who desires three and one half hours of good healthy exercise can have it for the small sum of five cents. Also on certain evenings, to be mentioned later, the Rink will be open from 8 until 10 o'clock and the price for the two hours will be ten cents.

The Directors feel sure that the public will appreciate this effort to give them cheap amusement and exercise. The Rink will be splendidly lighted the dressing rooms will be clean and warm, and the order will be perfect as it was last winter.
