The Month In Toronto

BY GERTRUDE PRINGLE

So far we have not had much summer. Following an unusually wet and backward spring and chilly May, June came along in the same mood, alternating however, between overcast and dull days, and very short spells of hot weather. So intense was the heat during the last week, that even the board of education took notice and ordered the schools to close two days earlier than scheduled.

Not much watering of gardens has been necessary, for Jupidus Pluvius attended to that, to the accompaniment of the bass orchestra and the electrical illumination provided by the skies.

On the first real day of summer, two attractive young women appeared on Young Street, wearing no stockings, the skirts just above the knee and arms bare to the shoulders. Thirty years ago, when the first adventurous girl rode a bicycle wearing bulky bloomers, she caused a sensation and was the target for disdainful criticism. At that period it wouldn't have been really safe for bare legs and uncovered arms to appear on the street. Today they create no stir.

It looked like a coincidence (but may not have been) when city papers carried announcements of the two great department stores, each with an offering of shares for public subscriptions. One is giving six per cent, the other five. The retirement from business of Sir Joseph Flavelle caused the control of the Simpson interests to pass into other hands. This is the third change in ownership in this organization in the fifty-five years of its existence. Robert Simpson, its founder, owned the business from 1872 to 1888.

The Eaton firm, which of course has been in the possession of the Eaton family since it started, is seeking funds with which to finance its huge new building, which extends from Yonge St. to Bay Street. For a few days all work on the gigantic edifice—which has reached the structural iron stage—was suspended, and the odd silence reigned over the usual busy scene. The cause, it has transpired, was due to underground springs. The water persistently appeared, causing it to be said, the failure of two firms of contractors. Work has now been resumed on a time bases. The oldest citizens will remember when Queen's Park had a lively little stream where water cress flourished. It is probable that in its underground course this same stream flows through the former site of the old Bishop Strachan school.

A great deal of dissatisfaction has been expressed because of the great width of the sidewalks and comparative narrowness of the roadway in the widening of Bloor Street. The sidewalks are sixteen feet wide, and the road fifty-four feet. It has been pointed out that the vehicle traffic is now nine times greater than it was in 1918, therefore wider roads are much more necessary than sixteen foot sidewalks. Bloor street is being made to conform with Danforth Road, which it joins. Those who have not been in Toronto since the war can hardly realize what a great thoroughfare the Bloor-Danforth is, extending west and east of Sherbourne Street for many miles.

Dr. Shields, around whom storms always seem to centre, has triumphed. Rotten-egged by the students of Des Moines University, a month ago, he has now been reelected President of the Board of Trustees. This Board is not without a feeling of satisfaction at the wide advertising its institution has received, both in this country and across the seas. Competition may be the life of business, but evangelists seem to flourish on publicity.

The question of a Divorce court for Ontario—which means Toronto—is being aired, both in Ottawa and in this city. A well known Anglican clergyman, the Rev. Ward-White, has come out in bold favor of establishing one. In a striking sermon he said in part: "Adultery has always been recognized as a reason for divorce by the Anglican church, but I think the divorce court in Ontario should include desertion and incompatibility of temperament. Give men and women an opportunity for self development if they are not suited to each other. Men and women who in a moment of passion have chained themselves to an intolerable condition should be permitted through the laws of the land to reach the ideal of a spiritual loveliness with one more suited to their character."

These are holy words. The present writer remembers a case where a couple tried nearly half the Anglican clergyman in Toronto before one would consent to marry them, and the aged one who did was severely censured. The reason for their reluctance was that the lady's first husband had eloped with her French maid on their honeymoon for which the English Courts had granted her an absolute divorce. But thirty years ago the re-marriage of divorced persons in Canada was very rare. Criticism from an outsider is always valuable so the farewell address

Holman's Feature

Sir Charles Dalton

Sir Charles Dalton, pioneer fox rancher, philanthropist, and public benefactor, in whose honor the Canadian National Silver Fox Breeders' Association staged the largest banquet of its kind ever held in Canada, is not a familiar figure to the majority of the younger generation, although his name is a household one. Everyone, however, can see a lifesize portrait of this genial gentleman in the display windows of R. T. Holman, Limited, Grafton Street.

This display is creating a great amount of interest among all fur farmers and fox ranchers. It shows the old stockade pen and the hollow-log den in which the first foxes were raised to maturity in captivity in this province. It shows the ponderous and valuable silver cups which are open to competition each year at the Royal Winter Fair. It shows in a graphic manner the growth and development of the silver fox industry, not only in Prince Edward Island but in all of Canada and also features the many points of excellence which have made "PRINCE EDWARD" Brand Fox Netting the choice of all successful ranchers.

This display was one of the big attractions in Summerside during the annual meeting of the Canadian National Silver Fox Breeders' Association in Charlottetown for the benefit of those who could not attend the annual meeting. 6826-7-23-11.

of Rabbi Ferdinand Isserman on leaving Toronto after some years of ministry here gives one to think. He stated: "Religious bigotry is one of the cancers knowing at the national life in Canada. It has penetrated our political life. It perverts the ballot and it influences political appointments. It has entered the world of business and industry. I know whereof I speak when I say that in Toronto none of our leading industrial and commercial firms will not employ young Canadian men and women because of their religious denominations. We have known young men and women—not only Jewish—who have crossed the border on this account.

The Green Shadow

"I wonder if it is as simple as all that," she murmured doubtfully. "How can I know my instincts are right?"

"I would gamble on them," Dale assured her, reflecting that a woman's instincts were often truer than logic and reason. Perhaps they would save her in time. "Anyway, time will tell. This ugly business will probably blow over in a few days. Why not wait and see?"

"She smiled vaguely. 'Your advice is so pleasant to take that I am doubtful of it. You see, Paul suspects something is wrong, and that makes it all the harder. He has bullied and cajoled, tried in every way to make me tell what's worrying me, and I have kept assuring him it is nothing. We had a spat only this morning. That's why he was in such bad humor. I was only trying to gloss over things with a fib when I said he had received had news from his broker.'

Dale frowned into the sunlight outside the window. Ainsworth appeared to be playing his dastardly role with great adroitness, pretending he did not know what was the troubling his fiancée.

"Oh," he murmured absently, "then he hasn't been bucking the stock market?"

"Just a little," she said vaguely. "It wasn't as bad a fib as it might have been. But he doesn't tell me much about it, and it wasn't the thing that upset him this morning. Now," and her face brightened again, "you must tell me about the pink elephants and the green dragons and what happened to your jaw."

SALMON CURRY

Take two tins of salmon, if you use the tinned variety—about a pound and a half of the fresh salmon after cooking. Melt an ounce of butter and fry an onion sliced in it without browning, add a desiccated spoon of flour and the same of cur powder, and cook together for minutes. Add to this a pint of water, or the fish stock if you have boiled the salmon; about half a cup of cooked rhubarb (in the winter use a sour apple, cut up instead of the rhubarb), salt this and let simmer for half an hour and strain. Put back into the saucepan add a teaspoon of essence of anchovy and a little more salt, if necessary. Put fish into this, reheat and serve (a belted rice about it. If you like.)
