

Underwear that Grandmother Knitted.

That's what Stanfield's "Truro-Knit" really is. The founder of the Truro-mills invented the machine that knits underwear just as grandmother did. He also perfected the process to make underwear unshrinkable. Those who remember the ease and comfort of hand-knit underwear will doubly appreciate Stanfield's "Truro-Knit" For Women.

Made of soft, silky, non-irritating yarns. Every fibre of the wool tested and shrank before weaving. All weights and sizes. Cut, fashioned and trimmed in latest style. Perfect fitting, easy, graceful, durable, and guaranteed absolutely unshrinkable.

It's The Range and the big assortment of STYLISH CAPS we carry that makes choice easy at this store. Every Up-To-Date Style Weeks & Co.

WANE OF DISTINCTIVE FEATURE OF CONTOUR

Portraits of Men in Higher English Life Reveal the Fact That the Fine Racial Curve, Known as the Roman Nose, is Rapidly Becoming Extinct—What it Represented in Character in Days Gone By.

A number of things are passing in these twentieth century days, among them that peculiarly distinct feature of Anglo-Saxon contour, the aquiline or Roman nose. This is no fancy. Speaking for England alone, any collection of portraits of representative men in the higher walks of life reveals the fact that this fine racial curve is rapidly becoming extinct. From the Duke of Wellington down, this nose has been associated with men prominent in military or naval affairs, in literature (notably poetry and criticism), and in finance and diplomacy, until the possession of such significant organs has become almost the sine qua non of an individual destined to be famous or successful. Varieties of course existed, such as when combined with beetling brows and sunken eyes you recognized the professor or arch critic of his generation. Or when taken with the square forehead, thin mouth and visionary eyes of the military genius, you got some great general. Or, simply existing in a silly scion of good family and meaning nothing whatever, in this case usually over-high at the thin bridge and in profile far too strong for the weakness of the face. In women of gentle extraction this nose was found beautifully proportioned. In belles of the mid-Victorian era were the lineaments of Caesar clearly revealed, associated with the delicacy of coloring and softness of rounded chin and cheek which redeemed them from hard masculinity, so that fifty years ago in any representative gathering of Britain's fairest and noblest the observer would note a similarity of feature, especially in profile, between peers and peeresses, poets and poetesses, statesmen and the grand dames of society. Caricatured, it lived in the drawings of Leech and Du Maurier. Taken seriously, it inspired creative artists both of pen and brush when dealing with the heroic. Special writers confused it with the Hebrew nose, and in prints of criminal and depraved characters one frequently found it distorted and tenanted to conditions of ugliness. Tennyson and the latest murderer apparently owned the same facial angle, if you corrected the droop of the eyebrow, the curve of the nostril, the set of the ear. Thus, the Roman or aquiline nose made itself and its possessor known to the world. Other noses might, if they liked, take a back seat; this nose never. Sala, Lamb, Kingsley all had varieties of the nose. The American variant is worst, seems on the point of disappearing. The contemporary portraits of great men and beautiful women no longer display it. There is a new nose. It is to be hoped that it retains the powers with which the organ was originally endowed; for example, we suppose that it still can detect and appreciate the new and define odors. But as a sign-post showing the path to glory, as an index of force of character or intellect, it is practically useless. The new nose is modest, retiring, seeketh not its own, is never puffed up. You would know it for a nose, certainly, but its ample and aristocratic proportions are wanting; it lacks a bridge, is spineless, immature, unfinished. Yet is it set in the faces of many eminent thinkers and workers among the younger men; it is already allied to keenness of vision, to talent, and may or may not be associated with good birth and breeding. The query is—is it a new nose, or only one that has always been with us, but is now gradually supplanting the old one? Did the nose aquiline largely represent class, and does the phenomenon of the new semi-straight, semi-noting nose represent the intrusion of mass? Against this timid and, it may be, spurious generalization you may pit the workman with the nose of a duke and the young colonial ruler with the uniformed, doling feature of a school-girl! So we accept the fact that in our own day types are passing.

A WIFE'S CONFESSION.

Of course every one knew when they were engaged and every one pretended to be surprised when they heard it was suddenly broken off. It was first said she had broken it off, then that his heart had changed, but finally she confessed that she had been so irritable, so depressed and blue that she had driven him away. Her good looks were vanishing. She was getting thin, pale, and hollow-cheeked, with dark circles around her eyes. Suddenly all society was pleased again to hear of the engagement being renewed, and it happened long before a beautiful and radiant bride was taken to the altar. She had regained her good looks, her former happy disposition and strong nerve all through a secret a friend gave her. A few bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is what made two more lives happy and a radiant bride more beautiful than she had ever appeared before.

Backed up by over a third of a century of remarkable and uniform cures, a record such as no other remedy for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women ever attained, the proprietors and makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now feel fully warranted in offering to pay $500 in legal money of the United States for any case of Leucorrhoea, Female Weakness, Prolapsus or Falling of Womb which they cannot cure. All they ask is a fair and reasonable trial of the medicine. Mrs. O. O. Scripture, of Prescott, Ariz., L. Box 504, writes: "For nearly two years I was a great sufferer from leucorrhoea and enlargement of womb, also suffered severely with dyspepsia and was run down—a perfect wreck. I doctored for several years; got no better, until about seven months ago I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Pleasant Pellets.' I can stand on my feet and work hard all day. I feel that life is now worth living, and shall ever feel grateful to you and shall always recommend your medicine to all who are suffering in any way."

The English face is going. It has served its turn, perhaps. Infusion of American and colonial blood will help to change it. The high-nosed country gentleman or landed noble, with berserk or Viking blood in his veins, finds that, like Alice in the Wonderland, it takes all he can do to keep where he is, and the work entailed takes something, a good deal out of him. One thing goes, then another, finally, he casts away his birthright, the arch or bridge of his nose, and his son and the younger members of his family appear shorn of that important feature. The plebeian nose, so long as it is neither pug nor pig, is safer, better. Men are not afraid of it. Syndicates and boards breathe more freely when the barriers of nose are broken down, and a good mediocrity of feature may yet avert a war or preserve a treaty. At all events, a study of our chief contemporaries will bear out a considerable portion of this reasoning. The beauties of society and the stage have a leaning to noses tipped like the petal of a flower, or to a nose which is a kind of modification of the Greek, frequently found among Americans. There is fast growing up a type of head, clean-shaven, firm, expressionless young faces, who bring their thick, straight dark hair and blue-grey eyes from the country to the town. They are forsaking the plow and the roadside school for the warehouse and the pestle and mortar. It is now openly reported of such that they would rather wear a black coat and starve than wear fustian and do well, to quote Thomas Hardy, but the stress of things drives them. The rural communities are dull; amusements are lacking; there seems nothing to live for outside work. Nature poets and wild animal delineators are not among these set, earnest, straight-featured faces. The former are more likely to be denizens of cities. Any way, in this slightly dour American face you shall see few aquiline noses, and yet such is the danger of generalizing that no doubt the first people readers of this article may meet after perusing it will be a group of students, none of whom has Celtic hair and eyes, and all of whom have Roman contours. Likewise, on opening the current number of a leading foreign journal, the long, high, prominent nasal organ of Sir Edward Elgar confronts us, whose peculiar cast of thought, confirms the impression that spirituality and fine artistic conception and power to achieve are still the dower of those possessing this fast disappearing feature.

Strayed, Farm For Sale.

I hereby offer by private sale a valuable piece of land situated on the Brackley Point Road, about 5 1/2 miles from Charlottetown, consisting of 50 acres of freehold land, 30 acres of which are clear and in a high state of cultivation. The remainder is covered with an excellent growth of hardwood, longers and scantling suitable for building purposes. A stream of water running through part of the farm makes it convenient for pasturage. A large barn is on the premises for storing the crop.

There has been on my premises, Keppoch, two Calves for the past three months. Owner may have same by proving property and paying expenses, otherwise they will be sold by Dec. 31st, 1904.
