Stricken Mother Would Quit United States

BOSTON, Jan. 28-(CP)—A broken-hearted mother whose five-year old son's body was found behind a billboard in Brighton yesterday, said tonight she wanted to go back to her native Newfoundland or the safety of her children. "I would like to take my family back to Newfoundland as soon as this horrible case is solved," Mrs. Arnold Harris, born Edith Belvin at New Chelsea on Newfoundland's Trinity Bay, said. "I don't blame Charles Lindbergh for being anxious to get out of this country. He had another child. I have four other children. Like Lindbergh I am considering my other children and I intend getting out of the United States."

Her oldest son, Ernest, was born in Newfoundland. She came to Boston with her husband who works in a Cambridge paper factory, and the boy. "No child seems to be safe in America today," Mrs. Harris said. Since the disappearance of her son Chester last October she has carefully turned down the covers of his bed each night.

Prince Edward Island-born Captain Archibald Campbell of the Brighton police division in which the child's bones were found in a shallow grave, had no hesitancy in declaring the burial behind the billboard was the second interment. "I'm satisfied the skull and bones were planted there later," said Campbell. All day police screened the earth of the unused backyard hoping to find further clues leading to the murderer. The homicide squad checked down stores of the child's debris.

"I've read in the newspapers," Mrs. Harris said, "that many interested in Chester's case believe he was the victim of a hit and run automobile driver. This isn't so. I know he was murdered. I know it in my heart and soul."

"When I first came here I thought policemen were terrible because they carried guns attached to their belts. Now I have a different opinion. One gun or even two is not enough to rid this country of these insane people who break mothers' hearts."

"Just as soon as the funeral is over we are going to move from here. I can't stand it. It makes me think all the time of what happened to Chester. I couldn't let the other children play here anymore. I couldn't bear having them walk these streets to school."

"You don't have to be rich or famous like Lindbergh to have horrible crimes committed on your children. We're just poor folks but it has happened to our baby." Rev. W. J. Mitchell, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Everett which the Harris attend, is trying to persuade them to move to that city.

Recalls Start Of Basketball For Pepper-up

TORONTO, Jan. 28-(CP)—Victorious captain in the first basketball game ever played, Duncan Patton of Toronto, said that "duck-on-the-rock" was a basis for the game. Invented by a Canadian, Dr. James Naismith, McGill University, graduate, it was intended to be a recreation game played on a small gymnasium floor by non-athletes. "Just as in duck-on-the-rock where a stone is knocked off a rock by another stone thrown at it, accuracy of direction was to be the keynote of the game," said Patton, one of the three Canadians who played in the first basketball game. He described how the sport was born.

Physical director at Springfield College, Dr. Naismith had been trying for a week to think of a fast gymnastic game to relieve the monotony of routine gymnastics. The idea came to him while he was lying in bed, and he jotted down some rudiments of it.

Early the next day Dr. Naismith got a couple of peach baskets from the janitor, nailed them 10 feet from the door to the running track balcony at each end of the gymnasium. For the first game Patton, now retired secretary of the Toronto Young Men's Christian Association and Eugene S. Libby, who became a California real estate operator, were chosen as captains, each team having nine players instead of the present five.

"The idea," Dr. Naismith told the boys, "is for one side to get the ball in a basket without running with the ball, striking it with the fist, or holding, tripping, pushing or shouldering an opponent."

"The players kept more to their original positions on the floor than they do now," recalled Patton. "Whenever a player lost the ball to an opponent, he returned to his original position in readiness for a pass. We tried to pass the ball to forwards for scores. With 18 men on a floor 25 by 40 feet, we couldn't move very much."

"Every time we scored we had to call the janitor to get his step-ladder and get the ball out of the peach basket. By the end of the year we had wire baskets so made that the bottom could be dropped by pulling a cord."

Patton produced a photograph of the college's "first basketball team, 1891." Laughing, he remarked, "we thought those uniforms were wonderful. They consisted of a thick, black long-sleeved sweater with grey flannel, full-length trousers and gym shoes."

Two other Canadians were on the team: F. G. MacDonald of Sunny Brae, Picton, N. S.; and L. W. Archibald of Truro, N. S. Dr. Naismith, for 40 years physical director at Kansas University, was born 75 years ago in Almonte, Ont.

Of the 13 original rules drawn up by Dr. Naismith, 12 are still in effect. Those who participated in the first game were invited to view a re-enactment of it in Madison Square Garden, New York, Jan. 27.

Six feet tall and of spare frame, Patton believes that his present good health may be credited in part to the athletic activities of his youth. "Although I weighed only 180 pounds I used to play in the line on the Springfield college team in football games against Yale and Harvard," he said. Amos Alonso Stagg was our captain, and we scored a touchdown once against Yale with one of the tricky plays he engineered. Yale outweighed us about 40 pounds a player."

House Discusses Redistribution

(C. P. by Guardian's Special Wire) OTTAWA, Jan. 28—Debate continued in the House of Commons today on a proposal to re-open the arrangement of constituencies adopted at the last redistribution in 1934. Conservative leader Bennett asked the government not to agree to a resolution introduced earlier in the session by H. E. Brunelle (Lib. Champlain) for a special committee to effect a more just redistribution.

W. P. Mucock (Lib. York North) and L. D. S. Tremblay (Lib. Dorchester) supported the move and pointed to alleged injustices in the boundaries of their own constituencies. John E. MacNeil (Cons. Toronto-Davenport) opposed re-opening the subject.

Mr. MacNeil spoke of the work of the franchise committee last year and observed it had been reconstituted again this year. He thought the resolution should be withdrawn and the subject matter referred to that committee.

Redistribution was based on the census and the next census was not due until 1941, he said. "The resolution called for what would essentially involve a complete redistribution which could not come, according to the British North America Act, until at least 1941."

Mr. Tremblay said the object of the resolution was not redistribution of all the constituencies in Canada but only a more equitable readjustment of constituencies where injustice had been done.

Mr. Bennett expressed hope the government might hold to amend the intention it might hold to amend the redistribution act of 1933. Parliament had no power to increase or diminish the number of federal representatives, he said, but could change the boundaries of the constituencies. The constitutional practice had been never to amend redistribution acts except for correcting typographical or construction errors.

"Not for one minute do I deny," Mr. Bennett said, "that the redistribution act of 1933 was not perfect." But he recalled the efforts to reach agreement on changes made by the 1933 act and declared there had been and could be no desire to seek party advantage. No person could know how the people would exercise their franchise. The debate was still in progress at the six o'clock adjournment.
