IN MEMORIAM

MRS. JOSEPH CULLEN

It is with feeling of sorrow and deepest sympathy that we record the death on Oct. 27th, 1949 in the Prince County Hospital of Margaret, wife of Joseph Cullen, St. Teresas. The deceased was visiting her son and daughter in Borden when the tragic accident occurred. Death came as a severe shock to her family, friends and neighbors. During her last hours she was visited by Fr. McLeod who administered to her the last rites of the Catholic Church to which she was a devoted member. She was a promoter of the League of the Sacred Heart and a member of the Catholic Women's League. The swift and sudden passing of his wife and mother has caused a great sorrow in the hearts of some of her devoted husband and family. The loss of a mother and wife who is the centre and the heart of a home is an impossible one. But this great sorrow is tempered by the faith which consoles those bereaved through the lesson of her exemplary life for which she is now reaping an eternal reward. The many Mass cards, spiritual offerings, flowers and messages of sympathy received bore silent testimony to the high regard in which the deceased was held.

Besides her sorrowing husband, there are left to mourn four sons and four daughters namely, James, Halifax, N.S.; (Mary) Mrs. Thomasson, Borden; (Rita) Mrs. Stephen Malone, Charlottetown; (Helena) Mrs. George Knott, Westmount, P.Q.; (Lucille) Mrs. Melvin Harper, Westmount, P.Q.; (John) on M.V. Abegweit, Borden; and Eddy and Leo at home; also the following brothers and sisters, Sister M. Rufina, St. Paul, Minnesota; Mrs. John McCabe, Boston, Mass. and Peter, Boston, Mass.

Her funeral which was largely attended was held from her late residence to St. Cuthbert's Church, St. Teresas, where Requiem High Mass was celebrated by her pastor, Rev. Basil Croken.

The pallbearers were Joseph Trainor, Joseph Gormley, John McInnis, Peter McKenna, Tom Curran, and Elmer McQuaid.

Her remains were laid to rest in the family plot with Fr. Croken conducting the burial service.

May her soul rest in peace.

Card of Thanks

The family of the late Mrs. Joseph Cullen wish to express sincere thanks to their kind neighbours and friends, the doctors, nurses and clergy, and to all who helped in any way the night of the accident; also to all who sent Mass cards, spiritual bouquets, flowers, letters, and cards of sympathy, and to all who in any way assisted them during their recent sad bereavement.

OSLO (CP) - Norwegian business, labor unions, towns and individuals contributed funds to build 30 prefabricated houses to be sent to Israel as a memorial to victims of the recent air tragedy near Oslo. The crash took the lives of 27 Jewish refugee children and seven adults.

The Morning Is Near Us

By Susan Glaspell

It was all about Mother, and she knew so little about her mother. That was sure beautiful—and always drew away from her. No, not always. She had an inkling now of something she had not known before, something her wounded heart had not told her. Her mother had not always wanted to draw away from her. There had been times when she almost showed she loved her. But when she had gone a little further—would draw back, as if she were—what? Afraid?

She heard a car turn in. In a moment Addie came round the house and with her a woman—from town, apparently.

As she rose and went to meet them she saw it was Mrs. Burroughs—the woman at Ivy's that day who had been kinder than the others. That kind face. "Perhaps you're not ready for visitors," her visitor smiled, "but I've been wanting to see you again."

"What must she think of me?" thought Addie, remembering the day she had said, "After my father died—" yet in spite of constraint she was glad to have so friendly a visitor. She always warmed to friendliness.

She liked people and wanted them to like her, wanted to be easy and friendly with them. And then she would come to a place where she could go no further. Something had built up and she did not know how to get past it. She would draw back when she wanted to go on.

And all of a sudden she determined, it'll not be like that! The Chippmans have kept silence too long. I'll break this down.

Before she could stop herself she said: "You must have thought I was very strange the other day."

"I knew you didn't understand," was the reply, simply and gently spoken.

"When I thought I knew, but I didn't. I thought Father had died. Even yet I don't quite believe it is true. My mind had thought the other thing so long. Now it's as if my mind wouldn't let Father be alive."

"Naturally."

"Of course I'm glad." Or am I? she thought.

"There was a warm feeling about your father," Mrs. Burroughs said after a little.

Lydia wanted to go further and ask, "Why was that? And what is it all? But this she could not do, could not ask what it was about her mother.

"You and I have quite a bond, Lydia. I may call you Lydia, mayn't I? And Mary is my name."

"A bond, Mary?" cried Lydia, in happier voice.

"Your mother and mine were friends when they were girls."

"They were? Why—why, Mary?"

She had never known anyone who knew mother when she was a girl. She knew nothing about her. Why was that? Mother wouldn't speak of when she was young, when she herself was little. When Lydia used to ask she was told to run along and play, or do her lessons. Once father told her Mother's family had all died and she didn't want to talk about those days. She didn't even know where her mother had lived before she was married—where she grew up. And now—

"Tell me about it!"

"Mother wants to tell you herself. That's one reason I came out. Mother likes to tell her own stories. What do you come Tuesday?"

After she had shown her new friend the house and she had met the children it was arranged Mary come out for her on Tuesday.

"I won't be helpless long," Lydia laughed, more happily than since Miss Jean McLaughlin had come. "I'll get a car and learn to drive it."

"Toward evening Warren and Ivy drove out with their children, John and Harriett. They were older than Koula and Diego and so far it had not been easy going between the children. John and Harriett tried not to stand and stare at the newcomers, but that was what they wanted to do. Koula was much impressed with them, but Diego seemed to be reserving judgment.

Later Lydia told them of her mother and Ivy seemed disturbed about her going in to see Mary's mother.

"Had you known she and Mother were friends, Warren?"

"Why—maybe I did. I don't remember."

"Do you know, Ivy?"

"Seems to me I've heard Mary speak of it."

They had been very good to her since that day they found she had come back all in the dark about her father. Warren still showed the strain of that night he had to tell her.

When Ivy came out the day following that night she had cried out: "Oh, Lydia! It's just cruel to you—and after all you've done."

She asked in a timid way, "Ivy, if Lydia would stay on, would you?"

"I don't know."

"I wish you would—if you feel you can. I'm used to you here now," Ivy had said.

Today, when Warren again joined the children Ivy said, "I wouldn't talk too much with Mary's mother."

"But I want to talk with a woman who knew Mother when she was a girl."

"I don't see why. I mean—let the past go. It wasn't a very happy past. Why not forget it?"

But how could you forget it? thought Lydia.

After they drove away she kept thinking about them. They had no interest in Mary's mother having known Mother when she was a girl.

To her there was something deeply stirring in the thought of becoming a little more acquainted with her own mother.

LEFT FOOT IN BANK FOR WORK IN CHURCH

WINNIPEG, Dec. 29 - (CP) - A woman theologian who left her business position to enter the active ministry, Miss Ivy Helps recently graduated from St. John's College here.

She is the second woman ever to receive a theological diploma from this institution. The first to do so was Miss Eva Hazel, under whom Miss Helps now serves as an Anglican Church "van-worker", in rural Alberta.

Their work involves conducting religious services and instruction in areas lacking adequate facilities for worship.

A former bank employee in Calgary, Miss Helps became interested in her new work several years ago and attributes her decision to a long friendship with Miss Hazel.

Canadian Credit Unions

In the bulletin published by the Dominion Department of Agriculture, Credit Unions in Canada, 1948, J. E. O'Meara of the Economics Division describes the operations of these institutions. The object is to organize a union where there is a common bond of association among members. Thus a common bond is quite frequently found among rural folk and the largest number of credit unions are in rural communities. The unions also operate fairly extensively in urban centres and among occupational groups.

Mrs. O'Meara points out that "much of the growth and expansion is due to the work of credit union leagues and federations which are in existence in every province. These encourage and assist new credit unions to obtain charters and guide and direct them in procedure, policy and actual operations."

Membership in Canadian credit unions increased by 71,409 during 1948 and total assets by some $32 million over the totals for 1947. Loans made to members during the year totalled $120,285,287. A breakdown of this figure by purposes for which loans were floated was not possible because of lack of complete information. But on that portion which could be analysed, indications are that more than half of the borrowing was for the purchase of machinery, buildings and improvements, land payments and mortgages, trucks and automobiles—in that order. Almost all of the borrowing was for agricultural purposes.
