Gleanings of a Rural District New Glasgow

Mr. Donald Gass left for St. John on Monday morning where he hopes to be employed.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Smith have returned home after spending the holiday season with relatives in the States.

Mr. Vernon Hill spent the festive season with his parents here and returned to Sackville to resume his studies.

Mrs. George McCoubrey spent a few days with her sister, Mrs. Fulton Pierce, who was convalescing from a recent operation.

Mr. Sandy Nicholson returned to Sydney after spending the holidays with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Willard Nicholson. He is a student of the Academy there.

Messrs. Huntley Dingwell and Eric Stevenson are on a pleasant holiday in Saint John, where they are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stevenson, the former a brother of Eric's.

A party consisting of Messrs. Millar, Stanley and Murray Orr, Mrs. Millar Orr, Mrs. John Pursey and Mrs. Hilda Douce motored to the Capital on Monday, and combined business with pleasure.

Mr. Ira McCoubrey is a patient in the P. E. Island Hospital for observation and treatment. His many friends look forward to his early return home fully restored to his former vigor and jovial self.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer McDonald had as their guests on Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. David Edwards and daughters Vivian and Joyce and Mr. Ernest Sudbury. Needless to say their company was much enjoyed.

The two popular young daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Alphonse Doiron, Muriel and Verna have resumed their studies at Union Commercial College and Prince of Wales College respectively, after enjoying the holidays with their parents.

Miss Sheila Dickieson informed the writer that she was not the soloist at the school concert, the writer regrets the error.

Other young men who left on Monday seeking employment elsewhere, were the Howatt brothers who went with their truck and were accompanied by Wallace Doiron and Harry and Richard McCoubrey.

Many will be interested to read the following. Mrs. Richard B. Dickieson received a letter from her friend, Mrs. James Bryant, a former resident of New Glasgow, which was written in England, where Mrs. Bryant is visiting her parents, whom she has not seen for twenty years. Her mother has been bed-fast for most twenty-seven years, but is never known to show any impatience. Mrs. Bryant mentioned the fact of the strict rationing on many articles, as well as prices being high.

The Mayfield Bible Study Group met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Cole on Tuesday evening with a large attendance. Rev. George Gough as leader led the devotional period, while all united in singing "Take Time to be Holy". Prayer by Rev. Mr. Gough. The first chapter of St. Mark was reviewed and the second chapter was the main study which was very interesting and brought forth a wonderful discussion. Rev. Gough led in prayer, closing with singing "Abide With Me." Mrs. D. S. Johnston invited the group to her home on January 25th.

Hunter River Masonic Hall was the scene of an interesting event when a large number of our youth attended the shower on Monday night in honor of Mrs. Sydney Holmes (nee Frances Bagnall). To the strains of the wedding march, played by Miss Eleanor Nicholson, a bride was escorted to a prettily decorated chair by Miss Shirley Carey.

Gifts were unwrapped by Miss Margaret Smith, Mrs. Harold McLean and Mrs. Stephen Burns. The accompanying verses and good wishes were read by Miss Verna Newman, while Miss Dorothy Bagnall played the gifts on the table. The bride in her winsome and girlish manner fittingly thanked her friends. All joined in singing "For She's A Jolly Good Fellow." Mr. Holmes then joined the company and with his bride enjoyed the music furnished by Doiron Bros. all gliding the light fantastic for a couple of hours. The many beautiful gifts testified to the esteem of the bride. After spending their honeymoon with the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bagnall, and other relatives, they will leave for their home in St. Stephen where the groom has an important position with the Customs Department.

Mrs. C. S. Dingwall entertained the members of the local Institute on the regular night. The president in charge, meeting was opened in usual form. Roll call was answered with a joke by ten members and one visitor. Reports from committees were received and new committees appointed as follows: Sick — Mrs. P. L. Campbell and Mrs. J. B. Dickieson; School — Mrs. Murray Orr and Miss Helen Kelly; Reports from committees were received and new committees appointed as follows: Sick — Mrs. P. L. Campbell and Mrs. J. B. ## CHATEAU SINISTER

By Lealle Beresford

MORE PASSENGERS

"Not when circumstances make the air a useful means—" O'Hara intervened, and asked sharply: "Where is Miss Payne?"

"The other looked grave. "Am I to assume that when you speak of circumstances and the air, you are troubled about Miss Payne and where she is?" he asked in his biting way.

"We know that she left London with you today. "She is here. At least, not here in this hotel, but—if you look out of the window, Mr. O'Hara, you will possibly see my launch taking her out to my yacht. Is there anything wrong with that?"

"I should say there was!" rapped Rittenberg, who—with O'Hara—suddenly realised that their plan to prevent Caryl boarding that yacht was now forestalled.

"And let me tell you this, Hussein, Rittenberg, went on: "Miss Payne isn't leaving this country in your yacht—ad certainly not for such a filthy hole as I know El Krabi to be—until we, her friends, have had a word with her."

The Egyptian smiled again, his eyes glittering. "Certainly, gentlemen, you appear either to have second-sight, or minds which have worked closely to the perfectly correct and logical issue," he said, and shrugged: "Excepting, however, in this respect. You will not see Miss Payne, any of you, before she and I and the yacht sail, as will happen within the next hour."

"We'll see about that!" Rittenberg raged. "We don't believe that Miss Payne has gone on board that yacht of her own free will!"

"You are entirely wrong there!" Hussein shrugged, and asked mildly: "Would you explain why you should be under such an impression as to imagine Miss Payne's unwillingness to accompany me on my yacht, wherever I may details of convention as it happens," replied O'Hara. "You know perfectly well, Hussein, what lies behind it all. You, who had old Andrew Payne murdered last night in Camden Town, as you've had other people murdered—"

"If?" The other laughed, and the sound reminded O'Hara of the rustle made by a snake slithering through undergrowth. Youself took a step forward, his brow suddenly black as a thunder-cloud.

"How you came to imagine all this stupid nonsense, I'm not in a position to say," he observed harshly. "And you cannot prove a single word of it. You know that if I were not, as I said, sailing in my yacht before the next hour is up, I would make you answer for such an insult."

"Ye—!" he laughed again. "I would be worth so much trouble for grown people you are really quite childish. I am wasting time on you. I can only warn you that, if you attempt to interfere with me in any way, I shall call the police—"

"Oh, we'll not that, anyhow," Rittenberg said round sharply. "That yacht's not sailing with Miss Payne aboard her before we've had a talk with her. I'm going to the harbour authorities right now—"

"You are remaining in your present positions, all three of you!" the Egyptian's voice snapped viciously, and again he laughed. "Are you such fools as to think I'm calling the police, or letting you call them either?"

"That yacht's not sailing with Miss Payne aboard her before we've had a talk with her. I'm going to the harbour authorities right now—"

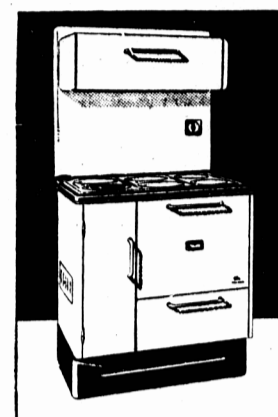

"You will now all accompany us to my yacht," Hussein said softly. "Our weapons are all silenced, so we shall not be afraid to use them, if you compel us to do so."

CHAPTER XX WELCOME'S WELCOME
O'Hara, aware that a chance interruption from people in this small and almost deserted hotel was unlikely, so quiet was everything around, looked at Rittenberg and nodded. He had read in the film-director's eyes that which suggested two minds thinking exactly alike.

local force, obviously much increased in numbers. He marvelled for a moment how this coup came to be made, and then—though still puzzled—he understood more.
"In plain clothes, Inspector Welcome emerged suddenly from the background, greeting him cheerily. "Ran it rather fine, I'm afraid," he said. "I had your message, but I had no way of what had been happening at the end. Didn't know, you see, where to get you. However, the only funerals will be those of your friend Hussein, and one or two others engaged with him in his affairs."
"Then you have got something definite against him?" O'Hara asked eagerly, relieved.
"Much more than something. Fortunately, Carnot recovered sufficiently to make a statement. Apart from that, we found added assistance from a quite unexpected source. A friend of yours, risen from the dead."
O'Hara, following the inspector's gesture, stared. Andrew Payne was standing before him, a bleak smile on his wizen face.
"It seems," the inspector explained, "that—just after your visit to him at the Mews—Mr. Payne caught sight of that scar-faced fellow yonder, prowling around. He got scared, and slipped out by a back way over some roof, nearly broke his neck doing it. However, he's been broken up worse if he'd waited for that bomb."
